Royal Victoria Packed For Last Programme of Musical Festival Here

Fifteen Hundred People Hear First United Church Choir Win Shield Over Visiting Organization From Vancouver—Mrs. W. H. Wilson, Soprano, Takes Gold Medal

Demand for Seats Unprecedented And Hundreds Are Turned Back From Doors

BEFORE an audience of 1,500 people in the Royal Victoria Theatre last night, the house having been sold out twenty-four hours prior to the event, the third annual Victoria Musical Festival was brought to a successful close, when the First United Church choir won the contest in the large choral societies class, competing against the Chown United Church choir, of Vancouver. Mrs. W. H. Wilson, soprano gold medalist, won the gold medalist finals, competing against Mrs. Arthur Dowell, soprano gold medalist.

All day yesterday hundreds of people who came to buy tickets for the performance, were turned away disappointed. The box office continually had to report all seats sold. It was a vast audience that looked down upon the stage when the curtain rose for the final and most important programme.

Dr. Daniel Protheroe, adjudicator, took occasion again to commend Miss Dorothy Hartree, contralto gold medalist, for her splendid performance. He said that he wished to announce that she was the most outstanding soloist of the whole festival.

The main event of the evening was the contest between the First United Church choir, conducted by Mr. W. C. Pyfe, and the Chown United Church Choir, of Vancouver, conducted by Mr. H. N. Drost. This is the first time that Vancouver has sent a choir over for this contest. The First United Church Choir has gone to Vancouver for the British Columbia Musical Festival for five years in succession.

The test pieces were: "Cherubim Song," by Rachmaninoff, and "Here Is the Little Door," by Herbert Howells.

BEST OF FESTIVAL

They were the best two choral pieces in the festival, Dr. Protheroe said. Both were full of mysticism. He rather wished, however, that one of the pieces had been accompanied so that there would have been plenty of abandonment in the singing. Both choirs sang the difficult pieces excellently.

In awarding the Jamieson Coffee Company Shield to the First United Church Choir, Dr. Protheroe said the choir had sung the first piece with fine choral tone at the start. Especially was this so in the women's voices. The chording was secure in pitch. "We would have liked a little bit more sonorousness in the bass, however. Lovely expressive restraint was shown. The moderato was attacked thrillingly and, at times, showed wild abandon, yet did not lose the fine tone. There was just as much charm when singing forte, as there was in the softest part. There can be no higher compliment than this. They sang with splendid restraint and spiritual feeling."

B.C. POLICY ON RADIO IS ENUNCIATED

Province Officially Asks Co-operation of Other Governments to Organize Broadcasting Service

PUBLIC BENEFIT IS BASIS SUGGESTED

Co-operation between the Federal Government and all provinces in the creation of a permanent system of radio broadcasting in Canada is forecast in an official memorandum laid before the Federal Radio Commission by the British Columbia Government and made public by Hon. R. H. Pooley, Acting Premier. The views of this province on the future administration of radio are thus summed up in the Government's statement:

"The Government of British Columbia is ready and willing to enter into negotiations with the Government of Canada and the Governments of the various Canadian provinces, with a view to the organization of radio broadcasting on a basis of public service, by some method that may be mutually agreed upon by the said Governments."

BEST CITIZEN TO BE CHOSEN

Native Sons and Daughters of British Columbia Sponsor Award of Appreciation Medal

NOMINATIONS ARE BEING RECEIVED

The awarding of an appreciation medal to the citizen of Greater Victoria who is adjudged to uphold in the best ways the ideals of good citizenship, will again be sponsored by the Victoria Posts of the Native Sons and Native Daughters of British Columbia.

The appreciation medal was inaugurated by the Native Sons and Native Daughters of British Columbia in 1927, when Captain Ian St. Clair, who for thirty-three years was a popular instructor of physical education in public schools here, was named as Victoria's best citizen. Last year Miss Mary Lawson, who for thirty-four years has been the efficient, untiring secretary-treasurer of the Friendly Help Association, was the recipient of the award.

Any man or woman residing in Greater Victoria for a period longer

King Alexander Pensions Forty Political Chiefs

BELGRADE, Jugoslavia, April 20.—King Alexander today took another decisive step toward killing all political opposition to the dictatorship. At one fell swoop he placed on the permanent pension list forty former premiers or cabinet ministers.

These included the former premiers, Probitchevitch, Davidovitch, Vukitchevitch and Uzunovitch, former Foreign Minister Nintchich, author of the famous Nettuno convention, four under-secretaries of state and two governors-general.

To Visit Victoria in Tour of Canada

SOME of the 150 cadets who are visiting Canada and the United States are here shown on the steps of the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa and inset is a picture of Major J. J. Simons, commander of the party. The Antipodeans landed in San Francisco on January 18, and went to New York via Arizona, Texas, Washington, Baltimore and Boston. They reached Canadian soil on Good Friday. Since then they have visited Montreal, Quebec, Ottawa, Oshawa and Toronto. From Toronto they go to Detroit, Chicago, St. Paul, Winnipeg, Banff, Lake Louise, Vancouver and Victoria, whence they will sail for home about the end of May.

German Delegate Was Not Instructed by Government To Make Startling Demand

BERLIN, April 20 (Associated Press).—Official circles in Berlin were hoping against hope tonight that negotiations of the second Dawes committee in Paris might yet result in some positive decision as to German reparations. The four members of the Cabinet most concerned with the reparations problem, Chancellor Mueller, Foreign Minister Stresemann, Minister of Finance Hilferding, and Minister of Economics Curtis, steadfastly adhered to their viewpoint that Dr. Schacht and his colleagues are to be considered as independent economists, uninstructed by the German Government.

But they feel that they would shirk their duty if they did not take advantage of the pause in negotiations over the week-end to confer with Dr. Schacht as to what might yet to be done to avert an imminent fiasco.

There was special interest in Berlin in Dr. Schacht's reported offer to place at the creditors' disposal 25 per cent of Germany's export surplus without any restrictions, to be added to his proposed annuities of 1,650,000,000 marks, in the event Germany's trade balance should become active.

This may prove a bridge to a reported compromise suggestion by Owen D. Young, it is thought here.

"It is easily thinkable that Germany might secure lucrative contracts, say in the Orient or in the Sahara which would change our now passive trade balance to an active one," a competent informant suggested to the Associated Press.

GERMANS ASTONISHED

German public opinion seems rather astonished at the Allied objection in reference to the Saar Basin the Polish Corridor and the lost German colonies. It is asserted that Dr. Schacht introduced these, not as political questions, but merely in the course of an economic analysis of Germany's ability to pay.

Some newspapers, however, such as Tageblatt, admit that Dr. Schacht's injection of these questions into the discussion was a psychological blunder.

DRIVER FINED $150

CLOVERDALE, April 20.—Pleading guilty to driving to the common danger, George H. Kenny, Vancouver, was fined $150 or sixty days, and Magistrate Harry Bose stated that he would recommend to the Superintendent of Provincial Police that Kenney's driver's licence be canceled permanently.

NORTHERN TOUR IS UNDERTAKEN BY MINISTER

Hon. W. A. McKenzie Will Proceed to Hazelton on Departments of Mines and Works Matters

WILL RETURN BY WAY OF ISLAND

Hon. W. A. McKenzie, Minister of Mines, who is also acting as Minister of Public Works in the absence of Hon. N. S. Lougheed, left yesterday afternoon for the North. He will visit Prince Rupert and proceed from there into the Interior as far as Hazelton and vicinity in connection with departmental matters connected with the two departments which he is administering.

Among the subjects that will receive attention during the visit to the North is the vexed one of the location of the bridge that is to be placed across the Bulkley River, to replace the condemned bridge near New Hazelton, known as the Haigwegate Bridge.

He will also look into the subject of the extending of the road from Prince Rupert to meet the highway that is under construction westward through the territory served by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Dr. Protheroe Would Hear Combined Choir in Great Composition

"THIS has been an inspiring week and demonstrates the wonderful power of music. Victoria is to be congratulated upon the great success of its musical festival and the high standard of the work," Dr. Daniel Protheroe, Mus. Bac., of Chicago, and vocal adjudicator of the Victoria Musical Festival, stated last night before he left for the Mainland.

"It speaks volumes for the widespread interest taken when every session in all departments had crowded houses. The promising young contestants, the ability displayed and the keenness of the competitions were inspiring and we look forward with optimism to the future of music in this lovely city. Soon the artistic features displayed will be as attractive to the outsider as the many charms of its beautiful environments. I was very much impressed with the uniform excellence of the work and the splendid spirit and sportsmanship of the competitors.

"With all the wealth of material, why not elaborate the festival idea and have one big session when all the choruses could be combined and one of the master works performed? This could be done without interfering in the least with the competition idea of the festival, which should be foremost.

"One of the pleasing features of the festival was the splendid accompaniments played in the various vocal classes by the official accompanist, Mrs. Clifford Warn. They were most artistic and proved, I am sure, of great help and inspiration to the singers. I shall carry away memories of a delightful week; of the gracious courtesy of the officers and the enthusiasm of the people in the cause of good music," he concluded.

STRANGE CASE COMES BEFORE PARIS COURTS

Winnings Accumulate Before Man at Table in Riviera Casino Until He Is Discovered to Be Dead

CASINO REFUSES CLAIM OF HEIRS

PARIS, April 20.—The story of an extraordinary tragedy has reached Paris from the Riviera.

An elegantly dressed man was seated recently at a table in one of the casinos. He placed a counter for a thousand francs (about $40) on a number and won.

The man, without removing his counter or troubling to gather in his heavy winnings, took his head between his hands and remained still, while the game continued.

The same number won again and then a number of times in succession, and each time the croupier added to the player's winnings until they had totaled $20,000. The man, however, remained motionless while head between his hands before the pile of counters representing so much money.

HEIR'S CLAIM DISPUTED

It then occurred to a woman seated on his right to look at her neighbor, and the tragedy was revealed. The man was dead from a heart attack.

The game was stopped while the body was removed to another room and the Casino authorities put the dead man's winnings aside. Later the money was claimed by the widow, but the Casino disputed the claim and argued that if the player had been alive that chances are that he would not have continued playing the same number. The widow appealed to the courts and the case is to be tried shortly.

Kansas Town Is Wrecked By Tornado

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 20.—Ferocious Spring twisters and murky flood waters had taken a toll of at least five dead, more than a score injured and uncounted thousands of dollars in property damage in the Southwestern States tonight.

A tornado that almost wiped out the little town of Reece, Kan., killed one man and injured at least four persons; an Indian was killed by a storm four miles south of Carnegie, Okla., and another Indian couple lost their lives in the debris of their home ten miles southwest of Mountain View, Okla. A baby died in her father's arms at Sand Flats, Texas.

BUS FALLS INTO RIVER; 5 DEATHS

LISBON, April 20.—Five persons were killed today and twenty injured when a motorbus crossing the Great St. Louis bridge over the Tagus River at Santarene fell into the river.

POLICE HOLD U.S. PATROL IN ONTARIO

Two Armed Men Land on Canadian Side of Niagara River From Boat With Machine Gun—Are Arrested

MATTER IS LATER AMICABLY SETTLED

BUFFALO, N.Y., April 20.—Strict orders were issued today to American coastguardsmen to keep out of Canadian waters. Action followed upon arrest of two members of the United States Coastguard early today after their rum-chasing boat, alleged to have become disabled landed on the Canadian shore of the Niagara River near Bridgeburg, Ont. Both Canadian officials and United States coastguardsmen drew revolvers when the two parties came in contact, but the Americans quickly made known their identity and there was no firing.

"If it is shown," Commander M. W. Rasmussen, of the coastguard, said tonight, "that the boat was in running order and that motor trouble was not the reason for the entry of the boat into Canadian waters, the two men will be disciplined."

So far as the Canadian Government is concerned, the matter was amicably settled this afternoon, when Commander Rasmussen and Chief Hyatt, the latter of the Canadian Customs force, completed a three-hour conference at Bridgeburg.

ARRESTED BY POLICE

Chief Boatswain's Mate Hubert Wilbur and Surfman Orville N. Lagrant were taken into custody by two provincial officers on the Canadian shore a few miles south of Bridgeburg, Ont. The two men had left the Buffalo station early in the evening in a cutter to patrol what is known as the "West River." A machine gun was mounted on the patrol boat and the men carried service revolvers.

TONS OF STEEL DROP 20 STORIES; MEN ON SCAFFOLD CRUSHED

Bundle of Fifteen-Foot Girders Is Being Hoisted in Construction of Huge Building When Cables Break—Two Men on Eighth Floor and Two on Sixth Are Swept to Death

Mass Slices Stone Coping And Cuts Steel Framework

Men Killed Are Buried in Wreckage—Four Employees Are Later Arrested on Charge of Criminal Negligence—Superintendent of Steel Construction Is Included

NEW YORK, April 20.—Four workmen were killed today by steel girders that fell twenty stories at the new Western Union Telegraph Building, and four other men were injured. The avalanche of steel, weighing three and a half tons, also caused much property damage. Four men were arrested on charges of criminal negligence in connection with the accident. The building covers a whole city block in the Lower West Side produce district, and will be twenty-four stories high when completed.

A bundle of fiften-foot girders had been hoisted to the level of the twentieth story. The bell man gave the signal to halt the upward pull preparatory to swinging the load inward. Suddenly the cables gave way and the girders fell.

On a wooden scaffolding at the eighth floor, two bricklayers were working. Scaffolding and bricklayers followed the girders downwards, to be buried in the wreckage. Two workmen on the sixth floor were killed and carried down. Flying brick and stone injured all in the vicinity.

The stone coping of a building across the street was sliced off and the girders cut through steel framework in the Western Union Building as if it was matchwood.

The men arrested were the bell man, a derrick foreman, the engineer in charge of the hoisting apparatus, and the superintendent of steel construction.

INDIA'S POET INSULTED BY U.S. OFFICIALS

Sir Rabindranath Tagore Leaves California Abruptly and Sails for Japan—Dislikes Los Angeles

RECEPTION NOT AGREEABLE ONE

LOS ANGELES, April 20.—Sir Rabindranath Tagore, Indian poet and philosopher, left here abruptly today, sailing for Japan, after he had announced he would remain in Los Angeles six weeks. Tagore said poor health prompted his departure, but B. M. Tucker, his American secretary, declared United States immigration officials had treated him with "contempt."

"That was very trivial, though unpleasant," said Tagore, referring to the action of immigration officials. "I do not judge American people by that one incident. I made this ship reservation several weeks ago." But it was also learned that he had made another tentative sailing reservation several weeks hence. After terming an unnamed immigration man a "silly ass" Tucker continued:

DOES NOT LIKE U.S.A.

"Los Angeles has not been above this attitude which has been shown Tagore since his arrival in this country. It is the contemptuous at-

Welsh Family Is En Route Under Migration Plan

The first family to come to Vancouver Island this season under the "3,000 Families Scheme" left their home in Monmouthshire yesterday, and expect to be here on May 4.

Major T. Godfrey, field supervisor for the south end of Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands, has placed this family, whose name is Swithin, upon a four-acre farm in Saanich.

The family consists of Mr. and Mrs. Swithin, a son of seventeen, and two daughters aged sixteen and ten, respectively.

Premier Makes Good Progress Toward Recovery

FIRST news received from Premier Tolmie for nearly two weeks reached the Parliament Buildings yesterday from an unknown point, somewhere in the eastern part of this continent, where he is holidaying.

While Hon. R. H. Pooley, Acting Premier, declined to say where this telegram came from, he revealed that the Premier is rapidly recovering his health and vigor.

The chief says he is feeling like a new man, Mr. Pooley stated. "This is the best news we have heard for some time."

WORK STARTED ON BELL TOWER OF CATHEDRAL

Messrs. Parfitt Bros. Hope to Have Porch Completed in Time for Opening in September

ESTIMATED COST SET AT $75,000

Work has been commenced on the northwest tower of the new Christ Church Cathedral. The contractors, Messrs. Parfitt Brothers, expect to have the porch built in time for the opening of the cathedral on September 28. Standing on a base thirty-three feet square, exclusive of the hexagonal turret at the northwest corner, the porch will rise to a height of twenty-five feet above the ground.

This marks the beginning of the Bishop Winnington-Ingram Tower, which is to be the bell tower of the cathedral, and is being erected through funds supplied by friends in England of the Bishop of London who laid the foundation stone in the course of his world tour, on September 9, 1926.

When built to its full height, the tower will rise 135 feet above the ground, nearly thirty feet higher than the apex of the copper-covered roof of the nave.

Parley on Smallpox Explodes

CALAIS, France, April 20.—Another European conference blew up tonight and in record time. It was that between health officers of Great Britain and France seeking to decide what should be done to prevent risk of travelers from Britain bringing smallpox germs across the Channel. The British delegation quit the conference with the announcement that they were unable to accept the French proposals. Th British went back to London. The French entrained for Paris.

Both announced that the status quo would be maintained for the present. The status quo is that vaccination is demanded unless evidence is offered that the traveler has already been vaccinated within a specified time.

WILL CELEBRATE ST. GEORGE'S DAY

Royal Society of St. George to Lay Wreath on Cenotaph and Hold Special Service

Members of the Royal Society of St. George will hold a special service in preparation for St. George's Day in Christ Church Cathedral at 7:30 o'clock this evening. The standards of the society will be carried in the church parade and Dean C. S. Quainton will conduct the service.

This afternoon members of the society will meet at the cenotaph in front of the Parliament Buildings at 4 o'clock, and will lay a wreath upon the steps in memory of those who gave their lives in the late war.

League Draft of Treaty Bars Gas And Germs in War

GENEVA, April 20.—After a week of discussion, the League of Nations preparatory commission on disarmament today took a forward step by adopting two clauses in its draft convention on disarmament, under which the contracting parties undertake to abstain from the use of gas or bacteria in war time. The commission became stuck at the two remaining clauses on chemical warfare. These deal with the preparation and importation in peace time of substances for chemical warfare.

WORK STARTED ON BELL TOWER OF CATHEDRAL

PORCH DESCRIBED

With two arched doorways facing Quadra Street, a buttress between them and three single-light windows over each, the construction of the porch will provide an attractive, roomy, and well-protected entrance to the cathedral. On the north side, opposite Pioneer Square, will be two double windows. A similar window on the south side will face the deeply recessed central porch, over which will rise the great arch linking the north and south towers of the west front.

In the centre of the porch, a clustered pillar will carry the groined ceiling, which is to be built of stone and concrete. The floor will be of slate of varied colors. Two doors will lead into the north aisle and ambulatory, respectively, while a large open arch will give direct access to the narthex.

To build the porch will cost approximately $17,500, while the total cost of the tower is estimated to be $75,000.

The granite plinth of the doorways and walls were set last week, and this week will see a beginning of the stone walling. As in other parts of the building, Newcastle Island stone will be used for the outside walls, which will be backed with concrete, and Canmos stone for the dressed work.

For years the construction of the road has been progressing from Prince Rupert, but the rate has not been a very speedy one. There is not more than six miles constructed as yet out of the Northern city, and there are complaints as to the progress that has been made in the last twelve years on the undertaking.

Mr. McKenzie will make investigations on the ground in Prince Rupert during his visit so that he may be advised as to what steps shall next be taken along the line of locating the road in the near future.

On his return the minister will make a stop-off at points along the Northern coast of Vancouver Island. He will motor back from Campbell River. It is his hope to accomplish the trip and be back again in the capital in something under two weeks.

Of the second piece he said the choir had sung a "lovely part song full of peculiar mysticism. The entire rendition was full of mysticism. The singing was colored with a grey tone. It was drab, as it should be. There was no red color written in the piece. The parts moved together nicely. There was delightful tonal texture in the sopranos. The performance was really an exceptional one."

The results are as follows: First, First United Church Choir, 170 points; second, Chown United Church, Vancouver, 164 points.

Dr. Protheroe was high in his praise of the two gold medalists who sang in the finals. They had selected difficult yet entrancing pieces. Both had sung very well and the competition was close.

BAND OPENS PROGRAMME

The Fifth Coast Brigade Band, Mr. C. A. Raines conducting, opened the programme by playing "Spirit of Pageantry," by P. E. Fletcher. This was followed by "Creme de la Creme," by Tobani. "Pride of Wales," by H. Round, introduced some very entrancing and well-known Welsh airs. The playing of Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" and "Land of Hope and Glory," from Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," brought the band prelude to a close.

The St. Margaret's School junior choir, led by Miss D. Baillie, sang "Drink to Me Only," by Geoffrey Shaw, with a sweetness and purity of tone that only a girls' choir can accomplish. The parts moved together with beautiful clarity. "The Dream Seller," by E. Markham Lee, was sung in a lilting manner. This choir won the J. C. Pendray Challenge Shield for the Class 8 competition.

In the gold medalists' finals, one of the outstanding contests of the week, Mrs. Arthur Dowell chose as her (a) number, "Solveig's Song," by Greig, and for her (b) number, "Elsa's Dream," by Wagner. The other finalist, Mrs. W. H. Wilson, chose "From Mighty Kings," by Handel, and "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair," by Haydn.

Five gold medalist singers entered this class. Whoever wins the medal in this contest is automatically eliminated from the solo contests of the Victoria Musical Festival, having won the highest award possible.

Dr. Daniel Protheroe, in his general remarks, said: "This has been an outstanding competition. It it a pity that we have to decide at all." Of the winner, Mrs. W. H. Wilson, soprano, he said her second piece was one of the loveliest of songs. It was full of charm. The entire selection was given delightfully. Tone, expression and style was full of charm, artistry, and was a joy to the listener.

Of the first piece, Dr. Protheroe said that Mrs. Wilson had a nice musical voice, ringing clear. The rhythmic movement was delightful. "It was done easily, naturally and artistically." Really excellent and beautiful singing from first note to last.

The results were first, Mrs. W. H. Wilson, 176; second, Mrs. Arthur Dowell, 172 points.

ORCHESTRA CONTEST

The Victoria Kiwanis Club Orchestra, conducted by W. Tickle, played the test piece of Class 47 for orchestras of not more than twenty pieces. The piece was "Caliph of Bagdad," by Boildeo, which introduced some catchy passages and a beautiful climax. The orchestra won the Rotary Club Challenge Shield in this class.

The Victoria West School folk dancing group, directed by Miss James, gave a "Tarantelle," the dance with which they won the B.C. Electric Challenge Cup in Class 74.

The Mary Isdale Dancers, of Vancouver, winners of Class 75 in the folk dancing, danced their "Bumpkin Nincsome Reel" in a spirited manner. These dancers won the Kent Piano Company's cup at yesterday afternoon's session in competition with eleven other groups. Mary Isdale directed the winning group.

Miss Dorothy Greenwood, who won the pianoforte contest in Class 44, played her sylabus piece "Rhapsody in G Minor, Op. 79, No. 2," by Brahms, in a proficient manner. Her technique was good and interpretative artistry excellent. She showed imagination in giving the narative. She was called back by the audience several times and was the recipient of three bouquets.

Dolly Rutledge, the fourteen-year-old winner of Class 14 for sopranos under nineteen, sang her test piece "Charming," by Edward German. She had a winning manner while singing.

RECITATION ENJOYED

Isabel E. Mackay's "Marguerite de Roberval" was recited by Miss Mary Callagan, of Nanaimo, in a very expressive manner. She was accorded a splendid ovation at the conclusion.

The First United Church Ladies' Choir rendered the two selections with which they captured the Daily Colonist Shield last Friday night. "The Death of Trenar," by J. Brahms, is a thrilling piece full of mysticism, austerity and coldness. The choir's singing at times sent a cold shiver through those listening, so well did they grasp the mood of the composition.

"The Cossack Cradle Song," by Gaines, was the better liked of the two, however. Nearly everyone loves a lullabye and Gaines' composition is a gem in this type of piece. The humming passages were well executed. There was not too much crescendo to spoil the lulling effect and yet there was sufficient urge in the voices to give that delightful rise and fall in the drone of the lullaby. The first sopranos sustained an entrancing melody during the humming passages, while the second sopranos and contraltos held the foundational chords. The contraltos sang with a splendid, sonorous tone and carried their parts through well. The sopranos did not spoil the melodic figure by over-emphasis of the accent.

VICTORIA IS NOT SLOW

Mr. J. W. Herman, president of Herman's Ltd., interviewed at the Empress Hotel, stated that his company had experienced the entire contrary to what was so frequently attributed to Victoria.

"Slow?" said Mr Herman, "I should say not. My company finds that Victoria ladies are as quick to know values and to respond to bargains as those in any other city." Mr Herman's experience is that ladies in Victoria are, maybe, a bit more deliberate—a bit slower in reaching a conclusion, but they're not flighty or erratic. If they say "they do not want to make up their mind just then, they'll come in later," they generally state a day, and on or before that day, they come in and advise the store of their decision. The Victoria woman's word is her bond, even though given lightly. She means what she says, and does what she promises.

"Believe me," said Mr Herman, "Vancouver's not like that. Victoria women are quick enough when necessity for action is peremptory—make no mistake about that." On every occasion when we have made outstanding offers we have had prompt response and quick decisions. We find Victoria ladies very well up in the fashions of the day—they know what becomes them—and they're quite definite and decided in their ideas, which makes it far easier for the salesladies and more satisfactory to all concerned.

"The crowd of buyers on Saturday was certainly an eyeopener," said Mr. Herman, "and if anybody tells you that Victoria is asleep, you can tell them they must be asleep to think so." The idea of two garments—Herman merchandise — for the price of one, plus only one dollar, seems to have caught the fancy of Victoria ladies, which is not to be wondered at when every sale made means a very serious loss to the Herman Company, but their policy of no old stock is inviolable and the present stock has to go, making way for new, no matter what the sacrifice may be. ***

titude which certain men show to all persons whose skins are not white, regardless of how great their culture or highly the world regards them. America has not been kind to Tagore and he is sick of it. The immigration man knew who Tagore was, and in spite of it he gave Sir Rabindranath a very uncomfortable time."

Where the claimed offense by immigration officials took place was not made clear. Tagore had entered the United States from Canada. Local Federal men said they had had no dealings with the distinguished man who had won the Nobel Prize for literature in 1913.

OFFICIAL'S ACCOUNT

SEATTLE, April 20.—Lost passports were responsible for Sir Rabindranath Tagore's grievance against American immigration officers, B. E. Gowen, American immigration officer at Vancouver, said here tonight. Only, Gowen added, he thought the poet's secretary and not Tagore himself, was the one who was really "put out."

About a week after Tagore arrived in Vancouver, Gowen said, the secretary reported that their passports had been lost and wanted to know if they could get across the border without formal red tape.

The officer replied that it just wasn't done. Finally the papers were found and Tagore crossed the border. All concerned had been "gentlemen" throughout the incident, Gowen said.

NEW YORK MART TONE IRREGULAR

Week-End Operations Observable in Early Dealings—Utilities Quiet Oils Steady

NEW YORK, April 20.—An irregular tone prevails throughout today's short session, with transactions on a smaller scale. Week-end evening up operations were observable in the early dealings. In the industrial group the shares of Radio and Bethlehem Steel were in good demand, while Commercial Solvents was the feature of strength in the specialty group and reached a new high level for the present shares. Rail shares were fractionally lower, with the exception of Erie, which responded to favorable March earnings statement.

Opinion is expressed in some quarters that directors of Erie will, in all likelihood, inaugurate dividend payments on the common shares before the termination of the current year. Utility issues were quiet, while the oils were steady. Coppers were somewhat heavy and failed to respond to recent good earnings statements released by some of the companies in this group. The tenor of week-end mercantile reviews was somewhat favorable, many of them reporting a slight improvement in general business during the week just passed. At the beginning of the final hour of trading the general list exhibited better tone. Early profit taking sales were absorbed in good fashion, and good demand was evident for a number of issues.

Sears, Roebuck and Montgomery Ward were both active and strong in the closing dealings. Factors confronting the market at the present time are of a constructive nature and, for the present, we think the market will continue to exhibit an upward tendency.

PHYSICIANS TO BE SUPPLANTED

EMINENT MEMBER OF MEDICAL PROFESSION FORESEES GREAT CHANGE

Medicine as Now Practised Is to Disappear—Health Advisers to Be Employed

LONDON, April 20.—(British United Press).—Sir William Arbuthnot Lane, one of the foremost physicians of Great Britain, in an article recently published here, predicts that the profession of medicine as now practised, will in time become a thing of the past. He says: "The great development of the future in medicine, as I see it, will lie in the scrapping of present ideas and the concentrating upon keeping people fit and enabling them to build up physical power and energy to resist disease.

"There is evidence that the change is already imminent. More and more doctors are beginning to realize that it is archaic folly to treat only the sick.

"Nobody ever thinks of letting an engine run without seeing that it is properly oiled and fueled. They know that very soon the machinery will refuse to function. Yet there are millions of people in every country who go from year to year without giving their physical machinery any special attention and without giving it an overhaul.

"In the future I foresee that people will visit their doctors three or four times a year. They will be advised about their heart, their lungs, their digestion. In short, they will go away with enough knowledge to enable them to preserve their physical fitness until their next medical board.

"In time, there will be no need for doctors and surgeons as we now know them. They will be health advisers.

"I believe that the only cure for cancer lies in its prevention. It never attacks a healthy organ, and the only certain way of insuring immunity is by keeping the body in a state of perfect health."

Federal authorities said Saturday that "overzealousness" in the performance of what they thought to be their duty resulted in the two men anchoring their craft in American waters and continuing into the shoals along the Canadian shore in a smaller motorboat, which they had in tow, and eventually landing in Canada.

REVOLVERS DRAWN

The two men disobeyed coastguard regulations when they retained their revolvers on entering Canadian waters and going ashore in Ontario, it was admitted.

On the Canadian side the officers were accosted by the provincial policemen. Before any gun play resulted Wilbur interposed himself between the two and explained who they were. The provincial men arrested the two rum patrolman and escorted them to Bridgeburg, where they were held for several hours, until released in custody of Commander Rasmussen, on orders from Chief Hyatt, of the preventive division of the Canadian Customs of Niagara Falls.

The small motorboat, which was seized a week ago from rum runners, was held by the Canadian authorities but the cutter was not disturbed.

Unstinted Praise Given Mrs. Warn By Dr. Protheroe

Dr. Daniel Protheroe, Mus. Bac., adjudicator in the Victoria Musical Festival, paid tribute to Mrs. Clifford Warn as an accompanist during the session that came to a close last night. On three different occasions during the festival he spoke of her work in glowing terms, and in a farewell message last night again alluded to her artistry and the sympathetic manner in which she had played for each succeeding contestant. She did much to help the competitors, he said.

NURSES' HOME WILL BE BUILT AT ST. JOSEPH'S

Luney Bros. Secure Building Contract — Walter Pridham to Undertake Plumbing and Heating

COST IS ESTIMATED AT OVER $100,000

The building of a new nurses' home to accommodate 110 nurses at St. Joseph's Hospital is to be undertaken by Luney Bros., and the work will begin at once.

The building, which will be erected at the corner of Collinson and Rupert Streets, will cost a little over $100,000, and will conform in design with the architecture of the new wing, Mr. C. Elwood Watkins, the architect, told The Colonist yesterday.

The plumbing and heating will be carried out by Walter Pridham, the heat to be supplied by the central heating plant built in connection with the hospital wing scheme.

The building will be three stories high and will include a large and well lighted basement, which is in the nature of a "lower ground floor" and will provide demonstration rooms, classrooms and a private laundry for the use of the nurses.

The main floor will be divided into a living-room, a library and a large hall, measuring 62 feet x 37 feet. The two upper floors will be devoted to double bedrooms, while, upon each of these floors, there will be a small study in which the nurses may read, rest or write letters.

It is hoped, said Mr Watkins, that the work will be completed by October 1, when it will be used to relieve the cramped accommodation attendant upon the largely increased training for pupil nurses.

BUCKLIN GIRLS ARE COMMENDED

Instrumental Trio Secures High Marks—High School Auditorium Packed for Folk Dancing

Yesterday morning's adjudications in the instrumental classes of the Victoria Musical Festival proved interesting. Miss Mary Bucklin, playing the violoncello in class fifty-eight, was highly commended by Professor Rex Underwood.

Her's was the only entry, but her marks showed that she was an accomplished player. She secured ninety-two points, thus winning the gold medal donated by Mr. Ira Dilworth.

Professor Underwood said that she had remarkable talent. Her playing was full of color and imagination. She played in a clean, healthy style, while her technique in both right and left hands was exceptionally good. "It was a great performance," he concluded.

"Excellent," was the terse manner in which Professor Underwood summed up the playing of Miss Dorothy Morton, Miss Adele Bucklin and Miss Mary Bucklin in the instrumental trio competition for the Mr and Mrs. Austin Curtis silver medals. This trio secured ninety marks in class fifty-nine.

The Albulay String Quartette won the B.C. Cement Company's silver medals in class sixty. They secured eighty-five points. Professor Underwood said the intonation was quite true. Accenting was lacking from the first violin as leader at times. The tempo was good and on the whole it was a most commendable performance.

Mr. Hugh McKenzie, who won the W. C. Pyfe silver medal in class sixty-one for cornet soloists, secured eight-five marks. There was a nice tone in general, the phrasing was good and the time excellent at all times.

Folk dancing yesterday drew a large crowd to the High School auditorium. Fourteen groups competed in class seventy-four. The finals were very close. The B.C. Electric Challenge Cup was awarded to the Victoria West School, which secured 189 points. Miss E. C. Haddow directed the group in a tarantelle.

The dancing was all that could be expected. It was executed in a spirited manner. The rhythm was felt and no effort shown in the dancing, which was good. The technique was also good, Beatrice Cave-Browne-Cave, N.F.C., stated.

Second place was tied. The Willows School "A" group, directed by Mrs. F. M. Kelly and giving the vineyard dance, secured 187 points, as also did the George Jay School "C" group, directed by Mrs. Louisa Griffiths. This group gave the Morris dance.

The adjudicator was busy all yesterday afternoon judging the twelve entries in class seventy-five, folk dancing.

In the elocution contest in class seventy-one for the gold medal donated by A. E. Humphries, the winner was Mr. R. R. P. Blandy with eighty-seven and one-half marks; second J. M. Jacobs, eighty-five and one half marks, and third, William Johnson, Vancouver, eighty-five and one-third marks.

Royal College of Surgeons of Canada To Be Incorporated

OTTAWA, April 20.—The bill to incorporate the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada was advanced through its committee stage in the House of Commons last night and given third reading. Dr A. M. Young, Liberal, Saskatoon, sponsor of the bill, explained the purpose of the institution to be that of establishing in Canada an organization similar to the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Edinburgh and Dublin. It aimed at a still higher standard of medical and surgical education in this country. Graduates in medicine of three years' standing from a Canadian university would be eligible to take the examination set by the Royal College of Surgeons of Canada, and if successful would receive the honorary degree of Fellow (F.R.C.S. of Canada).

CANADIAN CATTLE MARKET IS SAFE

Hon. William Atkinson Says United States Cannot Afford Prohibitive Tariff

Threats of an increased United States tariff against Canadian cattle need not cause serious alarm to Canadian farmers, according to figures compiled by Hon. William Atkinson, Minister of Agriculture, after a personal investigation of the cattle situation, during a recent trip to the Prairies and a visit to the Calgary bull sales.

"As such a move would do nothing to help the farmers of the United States, I do not believe Congress will put on a tariff sufficient to exclude our cattle," the minister stated today. "But even if such a tarrif is imposed, it will not seriously affect our cattle industry."

Mr Atkinson's figures show the United States uses between seven and eight billion pounds of beef a year, some fifty-six pounds per capita, or three ounces a day for every person in the population. It cannot produce this much beef, according to its past experience, for during the peak of war production, when cattle herds were grazed in national parks and everything done to increase the beef output, only 8,043,000,000 pounds were produced.

'LIQUOR CURE' INVESTIGATED

Seattle Coroner's Jury Inquires Into Death of Young Man at Institution

SEATTLE, April 20.—A "liquor cure," in which patients were permitted to bring their own liquor, was described here today to a coroner's jury investigating the death last Tuesday of Stanley Boyd, twenty-nine-year-old alcoholic.

Mrs. Daisy Carmichael, sister with whom Boyd resided, testified that Dr. James C. Clarke, at whose infirmary Boyd died, told her Boyd had been drinking a gallon of liquor a day at the home hospital.

Mrs Carmichael told of taking her brother to the physician's home last Sunday noon to undergo a "cure," which she said was advertised as "guaranteed to remove all desire for liquor with comfort within twenty-four hours," and watching him grow steadily worse until he died.

Neither Rev. George B. McClure, pastor of Columbia Congregational Church, who told the jurors that he was president of the company advertising a positive cure for alcoholism, nor W. W. Crowe, agent for the treatments, could tell the jury exactly what the treatments consisted of, but each admitted "patients were permitted to drink their own liquor."

Patient—"I say, doctor, don't you think it would be a good idea if I were to pack up and go to some place where the climate is warmer?"

Doctor—"Good heavens! Isn't that just what I've been trying to prevent?"

EXPERT HANDLERS WILL AID NOVICES

Leading British Columbia and American Dog Fanciers Will Assist in Forthcoming Show

The committee in charge of the Victoria City Kennel Club show on May 18 has completed arrangements with four of British Columbia's foremost dog handlers and one from the United States to be on hand for the coming event.

It has been noted in past years that many novice exhibitors have been nervous while in the judging ring, and this condition has been transmitted to their dog, and the result was often regretable, as in some cases with proper handling a blue ribbon would have taken the place of a red or yellow. At a championship show such as this the fanciers are out to win their points which means so much to them, and the club advises all those who have had no experience in handling to arrange with an experienced handler to show their dog and make careful note of the manner in which it is done. The fact of having so many expert handlers on the job should prove to be quite an education to the novice.

Owing to it being a one-day affair, the superintendent is already formulating plans in order to produce speed and efficiency. He intends to have a larger judging ring and also an auxiliary ring. The latter being provided for the class which is to follow the one being judged in order that there will be no delay between classes. Another rule is to be enforced is the displaying by the handler of the catalogue number of the exhibit while in the ring, and it is proposed to hand these out while in the auxiliary ring, which they will be relieved of at the exit.

A handsome silver cup has been donated by His Worship Mayor Anscombe, which will most likely be awarded to the winner of the best breed of the Alsatians.

Enquiries for premium lists and entry forms are growing daily, and already the list totals over three hundred.

ASSAULT CASE IS REMANDED

Hearing of Charge Against Philip Crouch in Police Court Will Open on Thursday Next

Philip Crouch was charged in the city police court yesterday before Magistrate George Jay with assaulting Bessie Crouch on April 18. The accused, who was arrested by Detectives Marcus Phipps and William Stark, pleaded not guilty through counsel, Mr. Richard C. Lowe. The case was remanded until next Thursday morning. Bail was fixed by the court at $100, in two sureties.

Lang Sam, a Chinese, was found guilty of having liquor in the Chung Wa restaurant, 542½ Fisgard Street, on April 9, and was fined $50 and $2.50 costs, or thirty days' imprisonment in default of payment. Sergt. Thomas Heatley and Constable Louis Callan testified for the prosecution; Mr William C. Moresby, K.C., counsel for the accused, did not enter any defence testimony.

Magistrate Jay committed John Stephen Raine for trial on a statutory charge. The accused elected summary trial before His Honor, and entered a plea of not guilty through counsel, Mr. Stuart Henderson. After the prosecution evidence had been submitted, His Honor sent the case to a higher court owing to unusual circumstances.

Arthur Murphy was arraigned on a charge of vagrancy by begging. The accused pleaded guilty, but was given his freedom by the court on his promise to immediately go to work.

Big Power Plant To Serve Whole Of Cape Breton

VICTORIA'S POSTAL FACILITIES

Mr. D. B Plunkett has rendered a service to the community in having introduced in Parliament the need of increased postal facilities for Victoria. It has been known for a long time that the present postal staff is overworked. Mr. Veniot, the Postmaster-General, must know this himself as he was a visitor to Victoria, when, presumably, he investigated local conditions. As a result of his visit, however, nothing worth while has been done and Mr. Plunkett has seized upon the opportunity afforded by discussion on the postal estimates at Ottawa to call attention to the deficiencies that maintain here.

There is a very striking commentary on the conditions of overwork that prevail in Victoria in the instance Mr. Plunkett has quoted of a district within seven blocks of the Postoffice where the morning delivery is often later than noon and sometimes as late as 1:45 p.m. This is a plain intimation that the local Postoffice is understaffed. Mr. Plunkett asks for an investigation into the Postoffice, wants salaries made commensurate with the work done, and wants an increased staff so that mails can be delivered with greater expedition. The Postoffice is a money-making institution for the Government and it is the duty of the Government to give the public the most up-to-date facilities. That it is not doing in Victoria, because the Postmaster-General is starving the service here and carrying it on with unnecessary economies.

What Mr. Plunkett says can be vouched for by all Victorians. The time has come for reform. Speedier mail deliveries are essential. To accomplish this a larger staff is needed at the Postoffice. The present staff is doing excellent work, heavily handicapped as it is and poorly paid. The business of the Postoffice here shows constant increases. The revenue increased by $24,000 in one year, yet in this year's estimate for outlay there is only provision for an increase of $340 in expenditure. It is not the fault of the Postmaster here. He is dependent for improved facilities on his superiors at Ottawa. In the matter of public service it ought not to be necessary to have to urge obvious improvements on the notice of the Postmaster-General. Since it is, however, Mr. Plunkett has performed a very necessary duty for which he deserves the thanks of all his constituents.

THE LAW'S TERMINOLOGY

The need of a strong drafting department in connection with Government is being urged in Britain. This is a department which would deal with the drafting of Bills so as to make them lucid and therefore understandable. If it functioned properly it would obviate, in many instances, the necessity of going to law to ascertain the interpretation of statutes. Recently Mr. Stanley Baldwin told a story of how, when Financial Secretary of the Treasury, he had to move a clause in a Finance Bill in the House of Commons. It was a clause, he said, that no one could understand. In moving it he explained to the House of Commons that the clause was incomprehensible, that he could not understand it and that his hearers could not, but that it was all right. It went through without discussion and is part of the law of the land.

The argument now advanced for clear legislation is that the English language is adequate to express lucidly all that any Legislature wants to express. Countless legal fees could be saved if understandable language were employed in all legislation, if involved phraseology were taboo and if logic governed the drafting of Bills. In Britain in 1928 the King's Bench Reports show that of 112 reported cases, sixty-eight were cases depending on the construction of modern or comparatively modern Acts of Parliament. Probably the record in the courts of British Columbia is equally high, for in this province the terminology of legislation leaves a great deal to be desired. Each successive session of the Legislature is mainly occupied with amending acts rectifying mistakes of previous sessions, and endeavoring in some instances to make the language clearer. It would seem a simpler matter to have Bills drafted in the first instance in language which all those whom the legislation is to affect can understand. To accomplish this someone thoroughly familiar with the English language is needed in the department which revises the drafting of Bills. If in Britain a drafting department is considered desirable, it is equally desirable in this province where the involved terminology of legislation has so often been the subject of unfavorable comment.

JAPAN'S ADVANCE IN MUSIC

Practically all the arts of the Western world have made progress in the Orient, and more noticeably in Japan. While advancement has been disclosed in painting, architecture, and even in sculpture a far greater evolution for the better has taken place in the realm of music. As a matter of fact, Japan at the present time is perhaps the world's best market for gramophone records, while a number of the world's best artists perform before full houses at Yokohama, Osaka, Tokio and other large Japanese cities at prices which would be impossible in Eastern cities. A tourist writes, apropos of things musical in Japan, as follows: "It is no uncommon thing, when tramping through the countryside, far removed from the ports and cities of the Empire, to hear the strains of opera or of some popular song floating out across the rice paddies. The radio, which has met with a great success in the Far East, furnishes Western music almost daily, and music of one sort or another occupies more than half of the programmes radiocast."

Not only, however, is this prevalence of Western music noticeable in Japan, but also an understanding and appreciation of it is gaining ground. For instance, Tokio now possesses three symphony orchestras with subscription concerts each season. Also, during the warm weather, concerts or recitals are given almost every night in one of the downtown parks, and the people flock to them in thousands. Japan's eager and intelligent acceptance of Western music is bringing another development of importance in its train. Japanese music, as such, consists of a simple melody and intricate rhythms. There is no harmony in it as that word is understood in the West, but it is becoming recognized that the best Japanese music has something to contribute to the world of real importance, although it must be reshaped and harmonized before the world will accept or understand it. This process of reshaping is well under way, many Japanese songs having been orchestrated in the Western fashion so that they retain their Japanese melody and as much of their Japanese rhythm as is compatible with the elimination of discord. In other cases Western musicians have made a study of Japanese music and have then composed original scores based in a general way on the result of their studies.

"CALLOUS INDIFFERENCE

The Nova Scotia House of Assembly is not inclined to mince words in criticizing the action of the Federal Government towards that province. In a resolution it has passed it says the Dominion has shown "callous indifference" in implementing the report of the Royal Commission on Maritime Plans, "so far as it recommends specific beneficial measures designed to assist the basic industries of this province." That is outright language and cannot prove particularly wholesome reading for Mr. Mackenzie King and his colleagues.

It is the old trouble of indifference and delay shown in implementing the findings of any Royal Commission. The same has happened in connection with reparations due to Canadian citizens arising out of the Great War. All these claims have been approved, or disallowed, or amended, by a commissioner, but the Government, although it has the money in hand for payment, money obtained from Germany, has delayed action for several years. There has been delay, too, over putting into effect the finding of the commission which recommended the restoration of the Railway Lands and the Peace River Block to British Columbia. Nova Scotia is not the only province that suffers. There are many instances which could be quoted to show that the Federal Government has a cavalier manner of treating the findings of Royal Commissions. The marvel is that, because of this practice, any reputable men can be found to make up the personnel of such bodies when their findings are so often ignored.

Mr. Mackenzie King says that the principle whereby the Federal Government contributes to provinces for the purpose of old age pensions is "thoroughly vicious." If that is his belief he should alter the principle which was approved by his own Government and passed by Parliament at its behest. He might make old age pensions purely a Federal affair as it undoubtedly should be.

PRINCESS CHARMING!

(To H.R.H. Princess Elizabeth Alexandra Mary)

O! Princess Charming! three today!
May you, forever, youthful stay;
And ever have a heart of gold;
May happiness, multifold
As Sunshine, crown your life, alway!

And, as the years their grace extend,
Grow up in wisdom! Friendships blend
With Love to guide you, keep you, charm,
Protect and save you from all harm!
Lifelong, may you ne'er lack a Friend!

O! Little Princess! you have won,
In Empire wide, from rise of sun
To sunset, all our hearts, today;
And we shall love you, dear, for aye!
A Happy Birthday! Little One!

—Kilbee Gordon.

RACIAL ORIGINS

Racial origin is a matter entirely different from citizenship. A Canadian citizen is a British subject owing allegiance to no mean Empire. Yet he is a strange Canadian who is ashamed of the fact that his fathers came from England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales or France. . . . Every farmer knows the value of the pedigree for his livestock. It is poor human stock that is ashamed of its sires.—Toronto Globe.

The preference of a life of inactivity to one of action is an error for happiness consists in action.—Aristotle.

Note and Comment

By R. B. D.

We have been told by an excellent authority that a good name is more to be desired than great wealth. Doubtless a good name is a very precious possession and carries with it an immense influence. If the good name is associated with a person or a nation in a high position, the influence it exercises is almost beyond computation.

* * *

The above train of thought was set in motion by news published in The Colonist on Friday morning. Some of that news was of a distinctly disquieting, indeed of an alarming, nature. Some of it was of quite a different nature, but none the less interesting. We shall comment upon the disquieting news first and dismiss it from the mind, because it is more pleasant to ponder over things that are pleasant than upon matters that are disagreeable.

* * *

The unpleasant news is the announcement by one of the leaders of the British Labor party that if that party is returned to power as a result of the pending general election the agreement upon which a settlement of the debts of the nations is based would be repudiated. That announcement of repudiation was accompanied by a bitter attack upon two of the great nations and some reflections upon the conduct of another great nation. The sensational attack was made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the late MacDonald Government, who of course will be the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the new Government if the present Government is defeated. The announcement of Mr. Snowden has caused consternation in Great Britain; and although the leader of the Labor Party has said that he is not bound by the statement of his first lieutenant, the attack also has produced consternation in Europe.

* * *

The other unpleasant news is that Germany has practically repudiated her financial obligations to the other nations by dictating the terms under which she will meet those obligations. There is little reason to doubt that the attitude of Germany is due to the attack made upon France by Mr Snowden. There is quite as little reason to doubt that France is the only nation in the world which thoroughly understands Germany. The attitude of France always has been that Germany is not a nation to argue or reason with, but a nation that must be dictated to, a nation which must not be asked what she is willing to do, but a nation which shall be told what she must do. Whether France is right or wrong in her judgment upon Germany, the condition of Europe today is a condition of present uncertainty and of possibilities of future turmoil. Whether she deserves it or not, Germany has not a good name.

* * *

However, if the news from foreign countries is somewhat disquieting and disagreeable, the news from other sources is altogether pleasant and extremely interesting. The past week has been a musical week in Victoria. In connection with a musical event of great importance to us, the first presentation we saw of "The Pirates of Penzance," there was an incident on the stage which illustrated the influence of a good name. The Pirates were a ferocious-looking band, but when they were commanded in accents which were far from commanding to surrender in the name of The Queen, they all with one accord submitted to authority.

* * *

The chief adjudicator at the musical festival held in Victoria during the past week, commenting upon the singing of Miss Dorothy Hartree, said "she had sung with consummate artistry; that her voice sparkled like a precious gem; that she had that mystic and subtle charm which was not trained, but born, in an artist." Turning to another part of the paper, we read something quite as convincing about the wonderful, mysterious and extraordinary power of a quality that cannot be acquired by training or from environment, and therefore must be a gift of the gods—the power of personality

* * *

You have heard of or read about Mr. A. J. Cook, the irreconcilable, revolutionary leader of the British coal miners. We have, and we have had occasion to say things about him that were not precisely complimentary. Mr. Cook is not a respector of persons or positions. The Prince of Wales and Mr. Cook met recently at a dinner given in the Mansion House in London to the chief workers for the relief of the idle miners. At the conclusion of the function Mr Cook made a speech. Here is what he said:

"You, sir, have done a marvelous thing. Christmas night I was with two Communist friends who scoffed when your name was announced to speak in behalf of the miners' fund; but they listened to what you had to say and when you finished there were tears in their eyes. They put their hands in their pockets and gave what money they had on them to the fund. It was a wonderful appeal to the country that night."

This is an illustration of the magic power of personality, a power that appeals to the imagination and arouses the emotions latent in the heart. No one who is not gifted with that mysterious power can become a great artist. Anyone who possesses it is endowed with a more precious possession than a good name.

Jots From History

HENRY Ford, one of the world's richest men, and one of America's foremost manufacturers, was born at Greenfield, Mich., in 1863. After attending the district schools he learned the machinists' trade. He located in Detroit in 1887, and became chief engineer of the Edison Company. In 1903 he organized the Ford Motor Company, which he developed into the greatest automobile manufacturing concern in the world. During the war Mr Ford's vast organization was turned over to the Government for the production of war materials. The plants now make tractors and airplanes as well as automobiles, to the number of over 1,000,000 yearly.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS MEETING SPEECH

Sir,—"Honor to whom honor is due." Might an "odd-man-out" be allowed to take exception to one remark made by the able American who was responsible for it? The particular passage in his speech (at the important meeting this week) referred to the late President Wilson as the first in the running in starting this most stupendous and comprehensive movement for mankind's benefit; and Lord Robert Cecil a good second! In one's humble opinion the order should be reversed. Perhaps those "in the know" will kindly inform the public, if the writer is wrong.

SAFETY DEVICES

Sir, — The deplorable accident recorded in today's Colonist of a three-year-old girl being run over and killed by a street car raises the question whether the cars of Victoria should not be equipped with some safety device to render a recurrence of so tragic an event less likely. I remember seeing a child of about the same age run over in Bristol, England, by a street car going very quickly. Everyone thought the child was killed. It was, however, only shaken and frightened. The reason for this was that the Bristol tram cars were equipped with an automatic safety device just under the front of the car, which scooped the child up and carried it forward until the car stopped. I shall never forget the horrible sight of the child being knocked down by the street car nor the mother's shriek. But what otherwise would have been a tragedy was prevented because of the safety device alluded to. This is the second small child to be run over and killed by a street car in Victoria in the last few years.

In the interests of public safety ought not inquiries to be made as to what safety devices there are and the street car company be compelled to equip their cars with the most efficient of these?

POSTAL FACILITIES

Sir,—The following letter has been sent by Rev Dr Campbell to Mr. Plunkett, M.P., to support him in his advocacy of better postal service in the city of Victoria:

"It was with unalloyed pleasure I read in The Colonist your address on 'Improved Postal Delivery, Larger Staff and Higher Pay in the City of Victoria.'

"I have been a resident of the city for many years, and for more than a quarter of a century a representative of the Civil Service Commission of Canada as supervisor of the examination of candidates to test their qualification for Government positions, and can emphatically endorse all you have said, and that especially in regard to postal deliverers.

"I hope when the matter is brought to the attention of the Postmaster-General, as you have done to the representatives of the people, the grievance shall be redressed.

"J. CAMPBELL.

YOUR GIFTS

You bring me gifts, O kindly friend,
That make toil's hours bright,
And with the purple twilight lend
Their portion of delight.
Your gift of love, with insight true
Can read the heart of man,
And see beyond the things I do,
The perfect tasks I plan.
Your gift of trust brings to me still
Fresh courage for each hour,
Arms feeble faith and faltering will
With swift, unfailing power.
You bring me gifts, O friend of mine,
For needs no others know;
I make no pleas, but you divine
Far ways where I would go.
The hill-crests of my hopes you know,
The valleys of my fears;
You bring me gifts, dear friend, and so
With strength I greet the years.

Ten-Day Conference On Education Is Of High Interest

By S. E. LANG

The ten-day Educational Conference, which began in Victoria and closed on April 1 in Vancouver, was without doubt an event of unusual importance in Canadian educational history, more important perhaps, in view of the probable effects upon Canadian educational policy, than any assembly of its kind during many years. In point of fact, owing to the emphasis laid upon the relation of education and leisure, the conference was unique. It is not too much to say that it probably marks the turning point, the reverse swing, of a long pendulum which has for so many years been moving away from the liberal towards the practical and vocational side of education. Thanks to the eternal vigilance of those who believe in education for life and not merely to make a living, our school programmes have preserved that liberal and liberalizing character and subordinated the vocational interest to higher things

The Indian sage, Sir Rabindranath Tagore, proved to be a very powerful "drawing card," both here and in Vancouver, attracting great numbers of persons who were curious to see him and learn something from him at first hand, as well as those who were personally interested in the poetry and philosophy of the East. Tagore's personality impressed itself upon nearly all who heard him. It was natural and, perhaps, inevitable that the picturesque Indian should be the target of a few good-natured shafts of humor. There may have been a few listeners of the variety known as "hard-boiled," who cynically argued themselves, and perhaps others, into the belief, or suspicion, that the atmosphere of serene detachment, the air of high musing, the faint tone of gentlest satire, the aloofness, the mystic sentences, were all a matter of deep-laid policy, and that Tagore had deliberately clothed himself with them as with a garment. But his audiences as a whole did not seem to think so. They took him honestly and sincerely at his face value and heard him gladly. Three centuries ago Bacon's "trumpet voice" called England to the study of physical science, and since then the admirers of the Baconian philosophy have been very sure that "an acre of Middlesex is worth a principality in Utopia." And yet a good many who heard Tagore, here and in Vancouver, were more than half inclined to suspect that the title to a principality in Tagore's Utopia might prove as valuable in the list of a man's assets as the Crown grant of a homestead and pre-emption on any fertile plain or valley on earth.

THE "MAN IN THE STREET"

The interest of the audiences which packed the Vancouver Theatre was maintained throughout. The audiences included those people who have a professional interest in education as well as those closely associated with them whose interest in educational work is sentimental rather than professional. There was also the quite indispensable "social" element, lending a smart tone and a brilliant color in entertainments amiably intended to show our visitors from abroad that even sober-minded school men are not wholly unacquainted with the conventional "proper caper." But the most important element in the conference audience was the man in the street, who stood in line for an hour or more in the drippy Vancouver weather, waiting for his turn to enter; really the most important element, because in the last analysis, the direction of educational policy is determined, not by scholastic forces, but by the power of public opinion.

The addresses of another speaker from India, Mr. Rushbrook Williams, Foreign Minister of Patiala, representing the Chamber of Princes, also made a powerful impression upon the conference. He was undoubtedly one of the outstanding figures among a very brilliant company of overseas delegates. The delegates from the United Kingdom and the other Dominions were without exception immensely popular. The character of the conference as a family affair within the Empire was emphasized by the speakers again and again. It was, in fact, a real Imperial conference in education, and the exchange of ideas which it made possible cannot fail to prove of advantage to all parts of the Empire. Our Canadian Ministers of Education, for example, realizing what is today being done in British education through the agency of the picture film and the radio, will be ready to avail themselves of British experience for the betterment of Canadian schools. The same may be said of the splendid health and physical education movements, so fully illustrated in the addresses and in both British and foreign films.

RESOLUTIONS

A feature of the conference which should not be overlooked is that the Educational Council will not be contented merely to achieve a great success in the conference itself, but is determined to carry on. Resolutions of an important character bearing upon education for leisure were passed by the conference. They will be placed before our educational authorities and urged upon them with all possible vigor. As these matters are largely in the very capable hands of Major Ney, the indefatigable and highly successful executive secretary, there need be little doubt as to the result.

"I hear Mr. Brown plays golf on Sundays," she remarked to her husband.

"Well, what of it?" commented the latter.

"Why I think it's dreadfully wicked."

"Wicked! It's wicked to play the kind of golf Brown does on any day of the week!"

Perhaps you don't think you're lucky!

FIFTY years ago the lad who was cramming for an examination was compelled to do his study by the light of a flaring oil lamp. If his parents were well-to-do—and very up-to-date—he might have had gas. And Miss Prunella had to do her hair by candlelight . . . with the old-fashioned curling irons that singed where they touched.

What a difference today! It's a very rustic home, indeed, that hasn't electric wiring installed. Just the touch of a button and almost anything you need is to hand.

Having got it, we should make the most of it. Plenty of convenience outlets . . . your studies made easier by the right kind of lamp shades. Clear, eye-saving light; clean, ready heat for your electric curlers or what-not. No matter whether it's for work or games, there's always some new reason to be grateful to the men who devoted their lives in making electricity help us live easier.

The use of electricity to the best advantage is dealt with in a practical manner in the book, "Correct Lighting for Every Room in the House." There is a lot in it that will interest you. Mail us a card and we'll send you a copy.

Joshua Hinchliffe, Minister of Education for British Columbia, will be the speaker-guest at Tuesday's luncheon session of the Kiwanis Club in the ballroom of the Empress Hotel, commencing at 12.10 p.m. The clubmen will present a St. George's Day programme, and selections will be rendered by the Kiwanis orchestra.

"The Early History of Radio" will be the theme of a discourse which Mr. James H. Beatty, M.P.P., manager of the Sprott-Shaw Schools, will deliver at the supper meeting of the Victoria Table of Ye Loyal Knights of the Round Table at 8 o'clock on Tuesday in the Empress Hotel private dining-room. Mr. Beatty will illustrate his remarks with specimens of early radio apparatus.

Hon. Mr. Justice Murphy, of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, will continue the talk at the Gyro Club luncheon tomorrow, in the Chamber of Commerce, which he commenced at last Monday's meeting, on "The Early History of British Columbia." The clubmen will also have as their guest Mr. Lester Patrick, manager of the New York Rangers hockey team.

HIGH COMMISSIONER

Sir William Henry Clark, K.C.S.I., C.M.G., M.A., British High Commissioner to Canada, will address the Men's Canadian Club at a dinner meeting next Saturday night, at 7 o'clock, in the Empress Hotel ballroom, on the subject "The British League of Nations." President Mark W. Graham will preside and introduce the speaker-guest.

A programme arranged by Rotarians Bell, Brown, Jameson, Lemm, McAllister, Moore, Nachtrieb, Pinfold, Sheret and Wilson, all of whom boast the Christian name William, will be presented at the Rotary Club luncheon on Thursday at noon, in the ballroom of the Empress Hotel. The character of the programme will not be divulged prior to the gathering.

The Kumtuks Club will hold a special business meeting tomorrow night, at 8 o'clock, in the Y.W.C.A. building, Blanshard Street, when arrangements for the annual dinner, which will be held in the Empress Hotel on May 25, will be discussed.

The Veterans' Column

By A VETERAN

BRITISH EMPIRE SERVICE LEAGUE

A wonderful work is being performed by the British Empire Service League, in the way of encouraging the proper type of immigration to the Dominion of Canada. Not only is the British veteran given letters of introduction to the Canadian Legion in Canada, but he is sometimes assisted out of special funds placed at the disposal of the B.E.S.L. We know of an instance where the league assisted two orphan lads, whose father was killed in the late war and whose mother died since the conclusion of it, to come to Canada, and they are now established in life in Vancouver, having received every possible assistance from the Canadian Legion in British Columbia. It is true that even among veterans in British Columbia that are many varied opinions on the vexed question of immigration, but if we are going to have immigrants, then let us make certain that as large a percentage as possible are British, and if they are veterans of the right type, let us give them a helping hand to establish themselves in the country of their adoption.

CANTEEN FUNDS

Interest in the Canteen Funds has been stirred up, and, if the discussions that have taken place among veterans during the past few weeks represent the opinion of the majority, then it would appear that there is a general desire to make certain that the interests of all the veterans and not a small part of them should be protected in the future method of spending these funds. While insisting that the funds be spent during the lifetime of those who created them, the veterans appear to feel that the spending should not take place over the short period of eight or ten years, but rather fifteen or twenty.

FREE MEDICAL TREATMENT

While veterans appreciate the step taken by the Federal Government in granting free medical treatment for all classes of disabilities to pensioners who are indigent, they do not like the gross discrimination made in the regulations, a discrimination which reacts in a very unfair manner against all pensioned veterans residing outside of Vancouver and Victoria. The regulations as at present framed compel an indigent pensioner suffering from a disability not due to war service, who lives in an interior district, to travel to Vancouver or Victoria at his own expense, for treatment. Only medical officers on salary with the Department of National Health and Pensions are permitted to treat this class of case. In other words the Department of National Health and Pensions has told their salaried medical officers to go ahead and treat these men, as long as it does not cost the Government any more money. As medical men in the interior and country districts are on a schedule of fees, they are not permitted to give free medical advice at the expense of the Government. As we have already stated, veterans appreciate the action of the department in the concession given, but it does appear rather mean and small to prevent this concession being given to pensioners who are trying to pioneer in country districts of British Columbia. The only solution to this question is free medical treatment for all veterans, irrespective of disability, and discrimination against none. In the course of time there will be a Federal election, and, if veterans are wise they will place their Legislative programme before all political parties but must be careful to ask only what is fair, just and reasonable.

PENSION REGULATIONS

Notwithstanding the changes made in pensions regulations from time to time, many inequalities still exist. One that is causing some concern to veteran organizations is that clause covering the granting of pension to the widow of a veteran who married her husband while he was supposed to be suffering from his pensionable disability and which caused his death at a later date. Under the present regulations it is possible for a widow to be refused pension who married her husband, say, in 1924, and at a time when he was not in receipt of pension. At a later date he is granted pension and it is dated back prior to the date of marriage. Upon his death, it is ten to one that the Pension Board will rule that he was chronically ill at date of marriage and the widow cannot claim pension, and this has been the ruling made in several cases during the past year. We venture to state that if some of these cases could be taken to law, the Pension Board would lose their case, on interpretation of the question "When is a man chronically ill?" The present clause cannot be permitted to remain on the statutes as it is. There might be two ways of solving the question: 1, To accept the fact that a man was fit at date of marriage, if he was not at that time actually in receipt of pension, no matter what percentage of pension may be granted at a later date; 2, To have the actual definition of the question "When is a man chronically ill?" placed in the act. At present, the Pension Board admits that it has to take each case on its merits, and that the decision has to depend upon the personal interpretation of the Pensions Act in this regard. From conversation with members of the Pension Board, from Ottawa, we believe that they would welcome some elucidation of this question.

DR. FISHER WILL OPEN OFFICE HERE

Dr. George Fisher, who has been practising chiropractic in Seattle for the past few years, returned to Victoria last week and is now residing at 1052 View Street. Dr. Fisher, who has been specialising in the treatment of nervous complaints, with great success, expects to open an office within the next week or so. Dr. Fisher is well known in Victoria, having been engaged in business here for some years. His many friends will be pleased to hear of his return.

REINSTATEMENTS NOW TOTAL 1,025

Many Voters Who Failed to Exercise Franchise at 1928 Provincial Election Are Reregistering

Applications received to date for reinstatement from electors of Victoria and Esquimalt electoral districts who did not vote at the last provincial election on July 18, 1928, now number 1,025, Mr. George H. Mabon, registrar of voters for these two constituencies, stated yesterday.

Over 8,000 electors in Victoria and 800 in Esquimalt who failed to vote at the last provincial election, will have their names removed from the provincial voters' list at the Court of Revision on Monday, May 20, unless they reregister prior to that date.

Reinstatements can be made at the Court House, Bastion Street, from Mondays to Fridays inclusive, between the hours of 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., and on Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Many applications for reinstatement were made during the past week.

One more chance yet remains for neglectful voters in these two electoral districts to get their names on the list, and this is by such electors applying in person to Mr. G. H. Mabon on Monday, May 20, at the Court House, when the Court of Revision is in session.

Qualification for the voters' list requires that the applicant be of the age of twenty-one years, a British subject by birth or naturalization, six months' residence in British Columbia, and one month's residence in the district in which he or she is living when making application for registration.

A change of address since the last provincial election requires notification in writing or in person to those in charge of the registration.

EGG POOL HAS OFFICE READY TO OPEN HERE

Nanaimo Will Be Centre for Vancouver Island, With Warehouse Accommodation, Committee Decides

BRANCH IN CITY TO START TUESDAY

Arrangements are practically completed by Mr W A Landreth, general manager of the Canadian Egg Pool, and Mr Maurice E. Brook, manager of physical properties for the British Columbia Pool, for the opening of the local branch at the Cowichan Creamery office, 516 Yates Street, on Tuesday morning.

Owing to Mr. John Gibb, secretary of the Cowichan Creamery Association, being out of town yesterday, no definite statement could be obtained as to the exact hour of the opening of the local branch, although it is authentic that it will commence operation on Tuesday

As far as could be ascertained yesterday, about eighty poultry fanciers have signed contracts with the British Columbia Egg Pool organization, and many more have signified their intention. A storage room has been built at the local office for the storage of eggs, and if necessary further accommodations will be constructed.

The Vancouver committee visited the local branch during the past week, and were pleased with the welcome they received and the large number of contracts that had been gathered in. From Victoria they journeyed to Nanaimo, where they decided to establish the assembly plant for Vancouver Island. Eggs from all parts of British Columbia will be shipped there in carlots to the warehouse that has been rented for the purpose The candling station at Nanaimo will draw upon a territory embracing 50,000 hens, as compared with Courtenay's 30,000. Qualicum Beach and Parksville will have no candling stations, but will ship direct to Nanaimo. Of the 50,000 hens tributary to Nanaimo, 20,000 come from the districts of Qualicum and Parksville.

It has been agreed to allow farmers on Denman and Hornby Islands, for the sake of convenience, to ship their supplies to Vancouver and the Egg Pool to charge 2 cents for transportation of crates, of which the pool will absorb half the cost.

According to the information received here, the Canadian Egg Pool has been completely reorganized and now embraces the four Western Provinces Mr Allister Forbes, of Cobble Hill, a man of wide business experience, is the vice-president of the British Columbia Pool.

Final arrangements, as far as the local branch is concerned, will be completed when Mr. Gibb arrives in the city from Duncan tomorrow morning

NANOOSE CLUB SITE VISITED

C.P.R. OFFICIALS EXAMINE GROUND FOR PROPOSED PREMISES AT BAY

Regard It as Being Ideally Located for Country Club Purposes

The Nanoose Club's site, overlooking Nanoose Bay, was visited last week by a party of Canadian Pacific Railway officials, who were favorably impressed by it as a potential field for development for a high-class country club, with special reference to sport attractions.

The party was composed of Mr. J A Angus, superintendent of maintenance and construction work in hotels, Winnipeg, Mr H. P. Mathews, manager of Western hotels of the system, Mr. C. E. McPherson, assistant passenger traffic manager of the company, and Mr N. R. Des Brisay, passenger department, Vancouver.

Mr. McPherson spoke highly of the advantages of the site, and believed it would commend itself to the class of clubman—captains of industry and wealthy business men—for which the series of attractions were contemplated

Mr H. R. Drummond-Hay, of Vancouver, secretary of the company, accompanied the party to the site and explained the project in detail for club quarters, stabling, sports features and other attractions.

Gas and Motor Vehicle Taxation Is Compared

Motorists Increase Levy by Nearly Fifty Per Cent in Canada, Comparative Figures for 1924 and 1927 Show—Motor Transportation Grows

During the progress of the annual meeting of the Ontario Good Roads Association, held in Toronto, an interesting comparison regarding the motor traffic and the taxes collected under this head was presented, comparing the years 1924 and 1927. These figures were as follows, covering the whole of the Dominion

YEAR 1924

	Gas Tax	Motor Vehicle Tax	No. Cars, Trucks
British Columbia (three months)	$ 51,461	$ 1,047,838	39,473
Ontario		4,208,009	274,427
Manitoba		791,307	44,094

Saskatchewan		1,842,246	80,017
Nova Scotia		672,885	10,106
New Brunswick		376,966	16,588
Quebec	66,398	2,153,065	71,320
Totals	$369,106	$11,272,870	569,345

The total amount collected was $11,581,976.

The number of cars and trucks was 569,345

The average amount contributed for vehicle tax per car, in the year 1924, was $20.34

YEAR 1927

	Gas Tax	Motor Vehicle Tax	No. Cars, Trucks
Brit Columbia	$ 782,751	$ 1,772,354	74,187

Totals	$8,273,797	$17,402,070	871,366

The total amount collected was therefore $25,675,807 for 1927.

The number of cars and trucks was 871,366.

The average amount contributed for vehicle tax and gas tax per car, in the year 1927, was $29.46

DRUGGIST HERE FROM PRETORIA

LABOR-COALITION SPLIT MAY DETERMINE ELECTION, MR. W. BONTHRON THINKS

Dual Language Test Is Aiding Dutch in Control of Civil Service Appointments

Consolidation of the Union of South Africa administration at Pretoria has had considerabe bearing in keeping the capital of the old South African republic evenly divided between British and Dutch residents, says Mr. W Bonthron who has been in business there as a druggist for several years, and is now on a world tour, registered at the Dominion Hotel

However, insistence on the dual language knowledge in the civil service has undoubtedly tended to help the Dutch-speaking population, which had taken much more readily to English than the English-speaking population to the Dutch language. In course of time the civil service is likely to pass largely into staffs of Dutch origin.

Outside Johannesburg and Pretoria, the Dutch element is overwhelmingly strong in the Transvaal, and that situation, backed with a large following in Cape Province and almost a complete blanket of the Nationalist party in the Orange Free State, is a strong factor in the Union politics, Mr. Bonthron points out, although in the forthcoming general election there is likely to be a split in the Labor party which may affect a number of the industrial seats in the Rand and elsewhere

The Union is offering somewhat interesting lessons for Canada at the present time, in its effort to tackle restricted areas for certain nationalities, the principal problem now being the segregation of Asiatics.

Mr. Bonthron came here by way of South America, Cuba, New Orleans and San Francisco. He will proceed home by way of New Zealand and Australia. He first went to South Africa in 1896 and lived for many years in Johannesburg.

Bail Is Set—His Honor Judge P. S. Lampman, in County Court yesterday, set bail in the case of Harry Ross, Ernest Kelly and Dan Bagon, who were committed for trial last week by Magistrate Jay in the city police court on a charge of assaulting William Waters with intent to rob him. His Honor directed bail at $1,000 in two sureties for each of the accused. Mr. Oswyn J. Boulton represented the Crown, and Mr. Gerald H. Sedger appeared for the three accused.

Probates Issued—Probates and administrations issued out of the Supreme Court of British Columbia at Victoria during the past week included the following estates: Arthur William Cocks, late of Brentwood, who died on March 26, 1929, estate, $13,614; Eliza Stewart, late of Victoria, who died on February 27, 1929, estate, $10,871, and William Alfred Cooper, late of Longview, Wash., who died on October 3, 1928, total estate, $9,432; British Columbia estate, $500.

Nicomen Island Work—The work in hand for the protection of the roads on Nicomen Island is progressing well, according to reports received, and it is anticipated that before high water arrives this work will be far enough advanced to insure against damage. Hon. W. A. McKenzie, acting Minister of Public Works, and the deputy minister, Mr. P Philip, visited the work a few days ago and found it going along well. Their instructions were to spare no pains to have the work carried along without delay, to insure against damage in case of high water coming.

Kelowna Inquiry—The commission has issued to Mr Lindley Crease, K.C., by the Government of the province for the investigation of charges made against members of the Kelowna police force, alleging that there was not the proper enforcement of the law with respect to trafficking in opium by certain Orientals in that place. The investigation was asked for by the council of Kelowna, and Mr. Crease, of this city, has been authorized to conduct the investigation under the provisions of the Public Inquiries Act. He will leave shortly for the Interior to enter upon his investigation.

MRS. HANDLEY DIES AT SHAWNIGAN LAKE

DUNCAN, April 20.—The death took place at Shawnigan Lake on Friday of Mrs Louise Handley, aged eighty-four. She had resided in this district for a number of years and is survived by one daughter, Mrs. R. J. Robinson. The funeral will be held today at 3 o'clock from Whidden's Parlors Duncan, to St. John's Church, Cobble Hill.

WOMAN INJURED

Miss Morrison, of 555 Niagara Street, was injured at 1 o'clock this morning when a taxi, driven by Sidney Westendale, collided with another car, driven by Danny Pascoe, at the corner of Government and Johnson Streets. The woman sustained a bruise over the eye and suffered from shock. Both cars were badly damaged.

The Music Festival Is Over

BUT in the memory of those who were privileged to attend the Royal Victoria Theatre on Saturday evening there will linger the remembrance of a great and glorious occasion. The final competition for highest honors . . . the invited guest artists and vocal ensembles who had already won in open competition . . . presented a programme which was a fitting climax to the greatest Musical Festival ever presented in Western Canada.

And to music lovers present there was significance in the presence of the Steinway. Selection of this world-celebrated instrument for the greatest event of the Music Festival proved the care with which all arrangements had been made. Here in Victoria and throughout the world, whenever a truly important musical event takes place, the inevitable choice of musically cultured people is the

FAIL TO SIGHT MYSTERY PLANE

CREW OF TRAWLER SHACKLEFORD REPORTS PASSING FLYER OFF IRELAND

Possibility of Man Being Transatlantic Aviator Shattered on Investigation

LONDON. April 20.—Scotland, which for an exciting few hours this morning believed she might have the opportunity to welcome an unannounced transatlantic aviator, settled back tonight convinced that the crew of the trawler Shackleford had heard something other than the airplane they reported early today A check-up with strategic points in Ireland, the Hebrides and Denmark discovered no one else who had sighted an airplane and the chief aviation centres had no knowledge of anyone planning a flight over the lonely waters of the Atlantic

A radio message received by an Irish station from the trawler said "Airplane bound east passed here this morning at 5 o'clock Position is 58 10 North and 14 20 West."

Three hours of flying from that position should have brought the plane, if such there was, to the Hebrides, and four hours at most should have found it over Scotland Persons on shore prolonged their watch much longer without reward. It was pointed out that a plane from Europe could have swung out that distance to sea and returned before exhausting its fuel supply, but no reasonable explanation was offered of why anyone should want to do so.

MR. G. O. MADIGAN DIES

VANCOUVER, April 20.—George Owen Madigan, provincial boiler inspector and native son of Victoria, died suddenly at Everett, Wash., while en route home to Vancouver by stage coach Friday afternoon

Death came to Mr Madigan on his sixty-fifth birthday, and he was seated beside Mrs Madigan in the stage when he was stricken. He had journeyed from Vancouver to Seattle by boat on Thursday

When the attack came officials of the stage line speedily removed him to Providence Hospital, Everett, but life was declared extinct

The body was brought to the city Friday evening

Mr Madigan leaves to mourn, his widow, one daughter, Mrs P H. Murphy, Vancouver, four sisters, Mrs Arthur Lineham, Victoria; Mrs S. O'Brien, San Francisco; Mrs. Robert Norton, New York and Miss M. Madigan, Los Angeles, also one brother, Louis Madigan, Fairbanks, Alaska

The funeral will be held Monday afternoon.

Former Victoria Girl Marries

VANCOUVER, April 20.—One of the prettiest weddings of early Spring was celebrated on Wednesday, when Elizabeth Jeffrey Alison, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Crawford, became the bride of Mr. William Melvin Norman Ramsay, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. H. M Ramsay. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Archdeacon Heathcote, assisted by Rev C. S. McGaffin, rector of St. Mary's, Kerrisdale. Given in marriage by her father, the bride looked charming in a French gown of ivory satin with long tight-fitting sleeves, finished with pointed cuffs. A long tulle veil fell from the shoulders in court fashion, and was overlaid with an exquisite wedding veil of old Limerick lace. True lovers' knots ornamented the veil, also orange blossoms, the face veil was held in place by a chaplet of orange blossoms. Her bouquet was composed of Ophelia roses and lilies of the valley and her only ornament was a string of pearls, the gift of the groom.

The only attendant was Miss Constance Bonnell, and Mr. Frank Pumphrey officiated as groomsman while Mr. Rex Pumphrey and Mr. Alan Spear were the ushers. During the signing of the register Mr Alan Spear sang "Because."

The church has been beautifully decorated for the occasion by friends of the bride, who chose a color scheme of yellow and green, this being carried out by masses of daffodils and other Spring flowers and ferns and palms. White satin bows marked the guests' pews, while Oregon grape formed an archway to the palm-filled chancel. The candles on the communion table were lighted for the ceremony. Following the wedding ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, and later Mr and Mrs Ramsay left on their honeymoon trip, the bride wearing a smart navy blue ensemble of crepe de Chine with touches of French beige, while the tricotine coat was lined with material of the same shade. She wore a handsome Fisher fur and close-fitting hat of navy blue felt and straw On their return Mr and Mrs Ramsay will make their home in this city. The bride has many friends in Victoria, where, with her parents, she resided for many years.

Shower Held

A shower was held on Friday evening at the home of Mrs. J. B Kinsman, Princess Avenue, in honor of Miss Margaret Watson, a much-feted bride-to-be. The guest of honor received her friends in the drawing-room, standing beneath a festooned umbrella. The house was artistically arranged with flowers in a color scheme of mauve and yellow, the dining-room decorated in pink. A boat-shaped basket contained the beautiful gifts, which were presented during the evening. On behalf of the girls of the B.C. Telephone staff, Miss M. Burley presented the guest of honor with a handsome silver tea service. Miss Duncan sang a number of songs during the evening, which were greatly enjoyed. The contest prizes were won by Miss M. Burley and Miss B. Toward. Among the guests were Mesdames Silburn, McGregor, Logie, Marrs and Kinsman, and Misses E. Walker, M. Burley, E. Warburton, B. Toward, J. Gove, C. Crooks, J. Duncan, L. Shower for Bride-to-Be

At the home of Mrs. J. J. Blair, Garbally Road, Miss May Blair and Miss Florence Bond were joint hostesses at a "personal" shower on Wednesday evening, in honor of Miss May Dempster, a bride-elect. The many beautiful gifts were concealed in a hat box, daintily decorated in mauve and yellow, the same color scheme being used in the reception rooms. The evening was spent in music, singing and fortune telling. Supper was served later, the table being centred with a miniature bride standing beneath an umbrella of mauve and yellow, from which silver streamers were suspended, and on either side were tall, yellow tapers in silver sconces. The invited guests were Mrs C. Bloomfield, Mrs. K Hines, Mrs. T Dempster, Mrs. K. Price, Mrs. J. Blair, Mrs. J. Dempster and the Misses Florence Bond, Alice Churchill, Dot Churchill, Mary Blair, Wynnie Dodd, Jean Dempster, Phyllis Petherbridge, Laura Nock, Rene Fewson, Grace Rees, Marion Dempster, Mary Robertson and Mary Dempster.

Golden Wedding

A pleasant time was spent at the home of Mrs. George Elliott, 1124 Dallas Road, on Thursday evening, the occasion being the fiftieth wedding anniversary of Mrs. Elliott's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Page. The marriage took place in Spring Lake, Michigan, U.S.A. In 1890 the family came to Vancouver Island, settling at Chemainus, where Mr. Page was engaged in the lumber business. In 1913 they moved to Genoa Bay, where Mr Page reconstructed and superintended the old mill which operated so actively during the late war. Mr. and Mrs. Page have one daughter living, Mrs. Elliott, with whom they reside. Another daughter passed away about six years ago. There is also one grandson and one granddaughter, Mr. Fred Elliott, of Chemainus, and Mrs. Grant Johnson, of Victoria, and three great-grandchildren. Four generations were represented at the family gathering on Thursday.

Fashion Fancies

By Marie Belmont

This is the time of year when, if ever, you must consider the printed chiffon dance dress. Realizing the importance of this mode, designers have placed on the market such a variety and abundance of prints as to bewilder even the sanest shopper. Choose your print carefully—and and then go ahead.

If you can afford a large, splashy design, the print drawn here is an excellent choice, pale green flowers on a dark green ground. The model is tightly hipped, tied in front and with a long very circular skirt.

Most of the severe cases of eye trouble are caused by neglecting the eyes after the symptoms of eyestrain are plainly marked.

An immediate examination and the relief of the strain will, in almost every case, prevent further trouble.

If you have a feeling of strain or discomfort in using the eyes, we will be glad to advise you what must be done.

The new corrective optometry, as practised by us, may or may not indicate glasses. Our technique uncovers all latent defects, and restores correct balance and the normal use of the eyes, in keeping with the age, occupation, and the particular needs of each individual.

The chief constable sat back in his chair and yawned.

"What is this yarn about the India Rubber men?" he asked. "You say a racing boat has been seen on the river—about the time of these robberies. Who has seen it distinctly?"

John Wade shook his head.

"Nobody, sir—it has not been seen, except at a distance. I have an idea it is painted black; it carries no lights, and it goes at high speed. The first clue we had of it was when bargemen complained of the wash it made. It's been heard, of course, but whoever is running it has used mufflers, which is very unusual in a motor boat. Only two men have had a view of her. One is a river thief named Donovan, whom I took for breaking cargo two months ago. He said that he and another man were in a small boat one night when this launch came out of the blue, and they had a very narrow escape from being run down. They could give no description of the boat, except that it was very short and hadn't the lines of a motor boat at all."

Jennings, one of the big chiefs, shook his head.

"Why should the India Rubber men take to the river? There are twenty ways out of London, and the river's the slowest. You can go from Scotland Yard to any part of the town in a taxi, and not one policeman in a thousand would dream of taking the slightest notice. My opinion is that, after their last big job, this band is not going to operate again for years."

A third member of the party, who was in control of the Foreign Branch, interrupted here.

"This is the work of an international crowd. As to their being finished in London——"

The telephone buzzer sounded. The chief took up the phone.

"When?" he asked. A long pause, and then: "I'll come right away."

He rose from his chair.

"The constable on point duty reports that the lights have gone out in the office of the manager of Frisby's Bank."

When they reached the bank, a police cordon had already been established. The manager's office faced a little street and contained the general safe.

Two lights burned there day and night, and the safe was visible from the point where the policeman controlled the traffic.

The constable's story was quickly told. He was waiting for his relief and Big Ben was striking the last note of twelve, when he saw the lights go out. He tried the door and then went to the window. He saw, or thought he saw, a man move into the shadow of the safe.

The bank manager, who had been sent for, arrived with the keys. There was, he said, a watchman on duty, and the fact that he had not answered the repeated knockings was ominous. He unlocked the door and the detectives entered.

"You had better take charge of the search, Wade—give Mr. Wade a gun," said the chief.

Somebody thrust an automatic into his hand and he plunged in. The manager's room was empty, but a second door was ajar. He pushed this open, stopped . . .

Bang!

A bullet struck the wall and covered his face with plaster. The second shot came nearer. He thrust his hand round the jamb of the door and sprayed the interior with ten shots. He did not hear the answering fire, but his sleeve was ripped to rags.

He demanded a pistol from the detective who had crept to his side, passing his own back. As he did so, he heard footsteps. Again he put his pistol inside and fired two shots. This time there was no answer.

It might be a trap, but he must take the risk. In a second he was in the room. It was a small office below the level of the manager's. In one corner was a steel door, behind that he could hear the sound of a motor. He tried the door. It opened suddenly—he had a glimpse of a car.

Rat-tat-tat-tat!

A car swept past, and from its interior came the rattle of automatic rifles. Bullets whistled, glass crashed; there was a scurry to cover. Then the car disappeared into St. James' Park.

The next morning Wade went to the hospital to see his would-be suicide. To his amazement she had left.

"A creature of amazing vitality," said the house surgeon. "Within a few hours she walked out. Attempted suicide, was it? The policeman who brought her here thought she had fallen into the water by accident. So no charge was preferred. By the way, she was frantic about a photograph she had lost."

"Did she give any name?"

"Just Anna."

John Wade was not interested in the woman, and she would have slipped from his mind if it had not been for the incident of the photograph.

He went to the Mecca to have a word with Lila. Without telling her what was troubling him, he asked whether she knew anyone named Anna.

"Anna?" she said slowly. "I don't know anybody by that name. Yet I seem to know the name so well. Isn't it curious?" Her sensitive lips twitched in the faintest smile. "She's a dream, I suppose."

"Like the strange experience you once told me of?" he bantered.

"No, that wasn't a dream," she said hastily. "But it was silly of me to tell you about it. It was nothing really."

He was too experienced a cross-examiner to pursue his questions even if he had not heard "Mum's" voice just then.

Mrs. Oaks had been to the City and had returned with a visitor whom Lila Smith disliked—Mr. Raggit Lane. He was tall and spare, with a thin ascetic face that would have been good-looking but for the lift of one corner of his lip which produced the illusion of a permanent sneer. He was always well-dressed, his nails were always manicured, his black hair brilliantly polished. He wore no jewelry except a small signet ring.

"Mum" was vague about his profession, but Lila gathered that he followed the sea. He had tea with Mrs. Oaks in her sitting-room—a large room, with two long opaque windows.

"How is the old man?" she asked when tea was over.

"Eh? Oh, he's all right. I don't want him to know I've been here today."

She smiled.

"You don't want him to know you've been here at all, do you? You can trust me, Mr. Lane. I never discuss anything with him except Lila, and I don't see him more than an hour every year."

Mr. Lane's brows met in a deep frown.

"Who is this Lila?"

Mrs. Oaks would do much for her good-looking visitor, but he had asked a question she could not, with safety, answer. She said instead:

"This fellow Wade worries me. He's always hanging around the house. I don't know whether he's after the girl or what. You never know what a copper's doing."

"Inspector Wade? He's pretty clever, isn't he?"

"Mum" smiled derisively.

"Ain't they all clever by their own account? From what I hear, they nearly got him the other day, these India Rubber people. I wish they had!"

Lane laughed.

"The India Rubber men seem to be rather busy," he said. "Who are they?"

She shook her head.

"I don't know anything about 'em," she said decisively.

He shrugged. "Let's get down to business," he suggested.

She nodded and, going to the fireplace, rolled back the hearthrug and pried up a section of the floor. Beneath was a steel trap-door. She opened it and brought out half a dozen little canvas bags filled with jewelry. Lane made his selection, dropped the articles into his pocket and returned the rest.

Just then there was a sharp rap at the door. Mrs. Oaks looked up.

"Who's that?" she asked.

"I should like to have two words with you, Mrs. Oaks."

It was the voice of John Wade!

Quickly she gathered the packages together, dropped them into the safe, replaced the parquet and rolled back the hearthrug. While she was doing this, Lane entered a big wardrobe at the end of the room. Then she unlocked the door.

"What do you want?" she asked.

To her alarm Wade's eyes were glued on the wardrobe.

"I came to ask you a question, but I seem to have arrived at a very awkward moment. Quite an unimportant question—nothing whatever to do with my duties—but I won't wait."

He walked to the door and beamed back at her.

"I'm afraid your boy friend will be suffocated unless you let him out soon," he said and closed the door.

Toward evening he wandered aimlessly along Shaftesbury Avenue and passed through Leicester Square to one of the streets that lead into the Strand.

A big limousine came noiselessly from the other end of the street and stopped before a restaurant. John Wade halted. He was not curious as to the people who were being assisted from the car by the stout commissionaire; his chief desire was not to barge into them as they crossed the pavement.

The man who alighted was tall, his head was bald and his hard old face was covered with wrinkles.

"Come on, my dear," he said impatiently, and assisted his companion to the pavement. She was dressed in white and wore a coat of silver tissue with a deep ermine collar. A slim radiant figure of youth; from her golden hair to the tips of her silver shoes she was a vision of loveliness. For a moment John Wade did not see her face, and then, as she came under the light, she turned her head. She did not see John Wade but he saw her and his jaw dropped. It was Lila Smith.

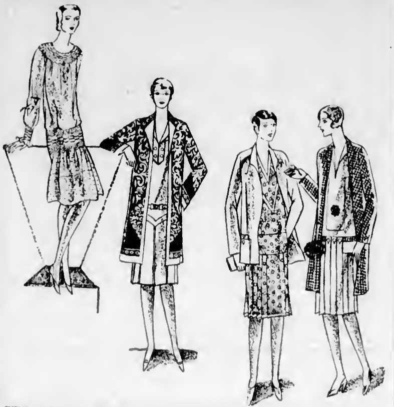
Novel Effects in New Coats and Gowns

Linens Have a Town-Like Air



Extreme left—Summery smocked dress in white Swiss, dotted in blue. Centre left—Sleeveless white linen dress, with coat of black, hand blocked in white. Centre right—Blue and white polka dot linen frock and jacket of white linen. Extreme right—Ensemble with dice check printed coat and dress in white.

LINENS and their sisters, the cottons, aim to be taken seriously. For in the Spring showing these fabrics dyed in street shades warrant the recognition of women of real discrimination. Even the time-dishonored gingham now attains an appearance of sophistication since it is designed in small checks of brown and white.

Wash febrics, as we have been wont to call linens and cottons, have received actual acclaim in the sports range. Now fashion sets store by the sheer voiles and organdies for afternoons, the latter being deemed smart for evening gowns, too, of an informal character.

Therefore, the success of linens and cottons will by no means be confined to sports apperel, for efternoon and white linen repeats these colors in its embroidered details.

The vogue for black and white is echoed in the attractive ensemble shown consisting of a well tailored sleeveless dress of white linen and a smart coat of hand-blocked linen in a charming panel design. Ensembles such as these are of the type for which the Summer woman will find many uses.

The jacket theme is nicely carried out in the modishly cut short coat of white linen worn over a dress of blue and white polka dot linen trimmed in bands of the white.

Frequent mention has been made of the smartness today of the smocked frock for the Summer. The model illustrated is developed in blue and white dotted Swiss with the smocking at neck, waist and wrists done in blue.

Bows Are the New Trim on Coats

THE shopper by this time is accustomed to the sartorial fancy of applying bows in every conceivable notion as a trimming note significant of the Spring. That it is to be a bow season as never before witnessed le assured by reason of the many kinds of bows that adorn hats.

And curiously, the favorite position of the coat bow seems to be at the back of the collar. One Spring model wears a bow attached at a point on the back yoke that is suspiciously near one shoulder blade. Necessarily to carry off the bow in grand style, women must be erect and graceful of carriage. Like so many other novelties of the season, the bow is designed for the straight and the slender, not for the short and plump.

Several smart features distinguish the feminine type of coat at the left, a model of black silk crepe with a softly rolled collar edged with white kid caracul, knotted at the centre back in tie form. So deep is the collar that it suggests a cape over the shoulders.

An unusually designed cape divided at one shoulder and attached in a unique line to the coat proper characterizes the centre coat of beige colored basketweave woolen strikingly contrasted with brown satin which lines the cape, faces the collar on both sides and edges the cuffs. To heighten the one-sided effect, a pert bow of small dimensions is posed at the right shoulder.

Black with white, or black with beige tones is one of the most conspicuous combinations noted among Spring coats. Variety is unlimited as manifest in the model at the right, developed in the fashionable black broadcloth, designed on straight lines, with a graceful shawl collar of beige fur, divided in two at the back, where it is finished by the inevitable bow.

Bows, however, are not shown on every coat by far, although there is a marked tendency toward the softer outlines as, for instance, in a cloth coat with an upstanding fur collar that ends in front in a jabot effect of the cloth. Such an alliance of fur and fabric lends more grace to the Spring coat than the customary collar of all-fur.

Blouses Become Feminine

SO many suits created by designers in apparently so many moods necessitate in not a few cases several separate blouses. The dainty feminine blouse is a trifle more popular with the majority of women who find the tailored one quite severe. Softer collar lines, a manipulation of fabric into a drape, a bow or a jabot, or two shades of a color, are contrivances of designers to take the edge of masculinity off otherwise plain little models.

Vicar—Do you believe in dreams, Willoughby?

Willoughby—I used to, sir, but I don't now.

"And why not?"

"I married one five years ago."

Color in Riding Habits

One of the most captivating habits shown on the Avenue combines breeches of tan twill, a coat of smart black, shirt of white silk and a tie bold in orange and black. A note of orange is one of the most tempting touches in the realm of contrast, especially when it is posed against the landscape of young Spring green.

It requires but a short study of new season frocks to note that the natural lines of the figure are glorified to a greater extent than ever in formal fashions and in tailored clothes as well. Bodices hug the figure, coats are semi-fitted or accent the waistline in some manner, and the hips and bust are discreetly moulded.

Bright Hues in Smart Belts

A BELT seldom if ever escapes the eye. Its possibilities certainly have not been overlooked by couturiers, for narrow belts define the hipline in many new frocks.

Color contrast is the important note in the belt of brown leather above, lined with red leather and snap-fastened through a double gold ring.

With so much red in the mode, the red leather belt from Hermes is one to note. This is one inch in width and wears a clever buckle of the leather.

"Here's a dime, my little man, to put in your bank when you get home."

"Won't you please give me a nickel instead?"

"Why?"

"Because I can't get it through the slot."

Paris Mirror of Fashions

By ALICE MAXWELL APPO

GOLD is again stressed in new jewelry. A bracelet ascribed to Louise Boulanger consists of ten gold filberts, cut in half and linked together in flexible manner. A necklace for this house is made of gold beads in graduated sizes, each bead having gold nubs irregularly spaced over it, thus giving a slightly rough surface to the strand.

Large gilt coin-shaped discs, or semi-circles, form a barbaric type of choker when attached to a gold chain. These also are designed to finish the neck edge of a dress, being sewed to the fabric.

A Boulanger choker of green beads set three in a row between rectangular small frames of silver is e most unusual piece.

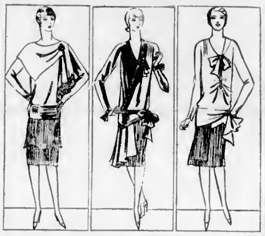
Bracelets are very flattering to the hand. Twisted beads have been quite successful. Patou now uses a bracelet of green and silver twisted beads in a thick rope to encircle the wrist.

From Talbot comes a wide, thick bracelet of zigzag green composition links that are held together on an elastic.

Schiaparelli is credited with a high choker composed of silver links and oblongs making openwork squares. This has as an adjusting feature in the back, a Negro art button clasp. Black earrings match the clasp.

Metal frame tops are the outstanding new feature in suede from Calmy. One of black suede in pouch shape embroidered in white wool has a triangular-shaped metal frame. A flat black suede purse with rectangular metal handle is embroidered in stripes of red, white and black wool. Plain black suede bags, very smart and tailored, are set on metal frames.

Dressmaker Details



AMERICAN fashion adapted from the best of the French models embody one theme that runs consistently through all meritorious designs. Copies now possess that significant dressmaker quality most requisite in the expert production of distinctive designs.

Small and seemingly minor details that proclaim a frock as painstakingly hand done are exemplified in fine pipings, beautifully finished edges, shirrings, tiny wrist edges or the favorite wee buttons and loops the Parisian insists upon along sleeve openings. Bows placed to advantage, taut hiplines, flatteringly draped scarf necklines, all have the flavor of real workmanship.

Because it is nearing the Spring we must write in terms of georgette and thin crepes seen in the most promising of the new feminine dresses, each having its place in carrying out certain types of designs and lines.

Smart in every way—back view, front view, side view and all—is the double-bowed frock of plain crepe sketched at the right, shirring softening the blouse and sleeves, and side panels of pleating acting as volantes or flying sections upon the pleated skirt.

Four bows, at neck, hip and wrists, characterize the centre frock of navy georgette with an arresting touch of color, namely, lime yellow in the facing and tab trimming.

A bit of Alencon lace is added to the jabot of the scarfed dress developed in navy georgette to lend a lighter note to a dark hue.

Scarf Eccentricities

LIKE the colorful and night-illuminated architectural plumage that tops the new midtown skyscrapers, a brilliant-toned scarf is the requisite modern note in finishing off the neckline of frock or informal coat.

Unique is the present season costume that is not offset by a scarf all its own. What costume comes into being minus this desirable adjunct to smartness usually ends up by a merger with a scarf of some sort.

The antithetic note—or the fashion song of contrast—may take the form of nothing more than the scarf, appearing as it does in subtle color contrast ready-made for the woman who is somewhat debating the proper and most effective choice.

Designers have taken no definite attitude as to any fixed position or material, but the type of scarf conceded greatest chic is that in which several plain colors are ingeniously seamed together. The scarf compromising between plain and printed crepe when seen is very cleverly done.

Independent scarfs and those attached to dresses are entirely new in shape and in manner of adjustment. There is considerable latitude in the draping of this accessory. Many e toneful scarf is given a position of adornment almost entirely at the back of a frock, as illustrated in the centre sketch, where two triangles are lightly joined with one edge of each turned back to form a suggested collar. The points of the triangle at the front are worn in a loose knot. This simulated cowl is very becoming on slender figures.

The many-way scarf shown is not as much of a puzzle as it would appear, and consists of two long sections, seamed at the centre back with a half of each given to one color. For instance, one long section is half-and-half light color and medium color. The second long section is medium shade and dark, half-and-half. When adjusted about the neck the light and medium colors are to the fore and the two dark ends cross in front and fall over the shoulders.

There are numerous versions of the favored triangle this year. One smart style is a triple triangle of crepe de Chine, the centre one falling in a V shape at the back and the other two forming soft flaring jabot shapes at the front of the frock, tied at the very ends in a loose knot.

Amusing Perfume Burner

A seemingly melancholy stork, perched on an open book, upon closer investigation turns out to be a pleasant, decorative perfume burner. He is made of colored china and lights up inside, which may account for his apparent sadness—or probably it is worry over the latest birthrate data. The fumes come out of his right shoulder. He and his book make a pretty novelty for any room in the house.

Versions of Spring Silhouette

FLARES in day dress do not destroy the slender line to which all women are devoted. In newly-arrived models from Patou flares are placed so low that they break the hemline into ripples of grace, thus abetting the feminist movement in dress.

The lengthened silhouette is en established fact in afternoon frocks. As is evident in the two models sketched, the waistline is placed considerably higher, with the flare coming just below the knee and swinging into an uneven and longer line. Tiny white motifs on white crepe signify a leaning toward lighter backgrounds in prints, as in Patou's frock at the left. The waistline is merely suggested by shirring at the side and front panels.

To the contrary, in many respects, is the centre frock, for which Patou uses e black and red print, breaking the princess line by e narrow belt. Frills cascade down the front and up the sleeves to the elbow in keeping with the finely-pleated knee flounce.

One of the most interesting fabrics, because it is rare, sponsored at the openings this season is Patou's jersey net—an evening material resembling ordinary net, but with more pliability and less tendency to lose its freshness. This is employed for both the gown and the three-quarter-length jacket in the ensemble shown.

As Couturiers Visualize New Spring Suits

THE suit of check plaid or polka dot is by no means a mere whim of fashion. It recurs again and again in ever-varying interpretations, and the vogue is given godspeed by several couturiers whose word means something of a fashion law.

Imports shown in metropolitan shops emphatically stress these checks, dots and plaids that enter with the Spring. And not all are developed in wools, for many of the Summerish suits and ensembles of silk display such designs.

Lecomte has introduced a smart model of checked wool for skirt and seven-eighths length coat with a blouse of white silk and a white scarf collar on the coat flagrantly bordered and dotted in red.

A jacket suit from Molyneux with a lengthy cape is shown in a live plaid, as illustrated, but is somewhat toned down in color by a blouse of white silk.

A more conservative use of plaid is embodied in the jacket suit from Chanel, the coat simply cut and the skirt designed with a decided flare, both in solid colored wool. Plaid wool jersey fashions the blouse with the bow trim.

Differing entirely from these two plaidish suits is the fourth model of Marcel-Rochas origin, a nice balance of plaid and plain woolen—the coat and skirt of the latter and the blouse and full-length coat-scarf of the plaid.

A smart tweed ensemble shown by one metropolitan shop is checked in two colors, such as blue and tan, with a blouse and a scarf that slips through the coat collar of royal blue, or a tan and blue check enlivened by yellow, or a red and brown check enhanced by a blouse and scarf of red.

Dark silk crepe ensemble coats covering printed frocks are popular metropolitan styles and the polka dot is prominent in the designs of prints. For the more mature small floral patterns are presented.

A very dressmakery ensemble showing much pleating in the skirt and side panels of the coat is shown in crepe de Chine of a polka dot pattern, such as beige on blue or rust, or white or black, the blouse matching the color of the dot, and in solid color silk, designed with the soft jabot front.

Varied Cravats

So many flat fur cravats are shown that we have come to think of this neckpiece in terms of fur. There are smart ones in printed crepe and in fabric to contribute to the chic of the fashionable coat. The cravat qualifies as a most desirable type of neckpiece, differing from the johnny and shawl collars. It is peculiarly becoming to every type of woman.

Dark Blue and Pink

Subtle color harmony exists in Worth's conception of a chic sports suit wherein a silk crepe frock of delicate pink cut with an intricately pleated skirt and an unusual uneven hemline formed by the pleats being two inches longer than the rest of the skirt, wears a cardigan of dark blue woolen which moulds the figure. A monogram worked on the blouse front is in dark blue to match the short coat.

That Well-Gloved Look

Slip-ons in suede and chamois, white or in the light beige tints, are very, very fashionable. But only when they are perfectly free from soil. In city life the delicate glove remains fresh scarcely long enough to see one through a luncheon engagement, or a shopping expedition. Sad to say, this necessitates many pairs and constant care of them if one is to be gloved immaculately.

Coat Fastenings

Buttonless coats are still to be seen, but many a woman has grown weary of clutching her coat about her to keep it closed. It is she who will be glad to know that Spring models cut to tie at the side fasten with some kind of buckle or are belted.

The Fad for Bows

The very fact that bows have become smaller in size seems to add to their fashion importance this season. Bow trimming is modish for the frock, the suit, the coat, and there are several types of perky felt bows seen on hats. Even the handbag is decorated with the bow.

Society Notes From Vancouver

VANCOUVER, April 20—One of the outstanding events of the season was the dinner and dance given by General and Mrs J W Stewart, when they had the honor of entertaining Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Willingdon, on Thursday evening at their home "Ardvar." Her Excellency wore a handsome gown of peach chiffon, fashioned in draped effect, and caught at the waist by a band of silver embroidery. Those attending the dinner were: Their Excellencies, His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, and Miss Helen Mackenzie, His Worship Mayor Malkin, Miss Lila Malkin, Major and Mrs Seldon Humphreys, of Victoria, Mrs B. Women's Institutes of Vancouver Island

ROYAL OAK

The last of the Winter series of card parties sponsored by the Women's Institute was held on Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. Nicholson, with a fair attendance. The prize winners were: Ladies, 1, Mrs. F Cariss, 2, Mrs J. Jones; 3, Mrs Nicholson; gentlemen, 1, Mr J. G. Nicholson; 2, Mrs. Milne (substitute), 3, Mrs. D. Greaves (substitute).

LANGFORD

The regular monthly meeting of the Women's Institute will be held on Tuesday, April 23, at 2 p.m., in the hall. Miss Drury, of Victoria, will demonstrate paper flower making. Arrangements will also be made for the flower show, the date of which has been provisionally fixed for May 4.

SOUTH SAANICH

The South Saanich Women's Institute held the April meeting in the rooms in Temperance Hall on Thursday evening with a good attendance of members and Mrs. H Lawrie presiding. Among the correspondence which was read by the secretary, Mrs C. L. Styan, was the quarterly report from the Travelers' Aid branch of the Y.W.C.A. In response to a communication from the League of Nations Society, the members decided to renew their membership and also to try to enroll a new member. The treasurer's report was read and adopted. A $10 donation was voted toward the fund of the Social Service League in Victoria for establishing a camp for underprivileged mothers at Sooke this Summer. The usual $5 donation was voted to the North and South Saanich Agricultural Society to be used as prize money in the light and dark fruit cake section in the coming Fall Fair. It was decided to start rehearsals for a play in the Fall which will be presented some time during the coming Winter. Mrs Howe was appointed to find a suitable play.

KEATING

The committees for the next two card parties were appointed as follows: April 27, Mesdames E. T Lawrie, A. Sutherland, F Spooner and W. Bate; May 11, Misses Nellie Styan, Ona Young, Janet Sherring and Beatrice Butler. Mrs J. J Young, of the school committee, reported having visited the school. Mesdames L. Hafer and W Michell, the committee appointed to purchase seeds for the Institute members, reported that, with the kind assistance of Mr George Robinson, of Elk Lake, they had a number of seeds ready for distribution among the members. These were later distributed. The speaker of the evening was Mr Lionel Taylor, of Mount Newton, who gave a most interesting talk on the history and culture of lilies, telling of the most suitable varieties to grow in the home garden and of the various methods of increasing the stock. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the speaker for his talk. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served by Mesdames J. J. Young, D. K Beaumont and Miss Trapp. At the next meeting, on May 18, it is hoped to have a speaker on fancywork.

Amphion Hall Is Scene of Wedding

A wedding of great interest to the many friends of the bride and bridegroom was celebrated at the Amphion Hall, Yates Street, last night, when Vera, eldest daughter of Mr and Mrs Harry Willoughby, 918 Kings Road, and Arthur, only son of Mr. and Mrs Arthur Manson, 1054 Pandora Avenue, were united in marriage by Rev. Dr Clem Davies. The bride entered the hall, which was prettily decorated with Spring flowers, on the arm of her father. She was charmingly attired in a youthful gown of peach crepe de Chine with regular hem of tulle, and wore a head bandeau of pink tulle. She carried a shower bouquet of Ophelia roses and Easter lilies. Miss Beatrice Willoughby, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid. She wore a dress of blush satin back crepe, tight fitting bodice and full fashioned flounce skirt. Misses Eileen Sparkes and Flora Harrison accompanied the bride as flower girls, dressed in pale blue crepe de Chine and pale pink and gold lace, respectively. Mr. Angus Chilton was best man. The groom's gift to the bride was a pearl necklace, to the bridesmaid a ring, pendants to the little flower girls, and to the best man a silver engraved pencil. The bride's gift to the groom was a silver cigarette case. The bride's mother, attired in a gown of peach crepe de Chine trimmed with lace, assisted the young couple in receiving the guests, together with Mrs Arthur F. Manson, Sr., the bridegroom's mother. A dance followed the reception, a four-piece orchestra accompanying. Among the many beautiful and useful gifts received by the bride and bridegroom was a silver cake basket with flowers from the schoolchildren of Sidney; also an electric toaster from the Gray Line staff, where the bridegroom was previously employed, and from the staff of the V. I. Coach Lines, his present employers, a mantel clock, and a cheque to the bride from the Economy Steam Laundry, and an ornamental pink crystal fruit bowl from the Premier and Mrs. Tolmie. During the signing of the register, Mrs Lefevre sang "Because," and Mr Bird, Jr., played "The Wedding March."

The bride traveled in a dress of rose gabardine, trimmed with fawn, and hat and coat to match. The happy couple left on the midnight boat for a short honeymoon to coast cities, after which they will make their home in Victoria.

TWO GARMENTS for One Dollar More Than the PRICE OF ONE

WE BEAR THE LOSS—We're glad to do so when it benefits our customers. The terribly late season compels us to take drastic measures to turn our stock over. So we're now practically giving you TWO GARMENTS for the PRICE of ONE. There are no strings on this—we don't demand your cash—our 12-pay plan is at your entire disposal. We're glad to have you avail yourselves of it—and we don't confine you to purchasing two similar garments; you can vary as and how you like—buy a dress at, say, $35, pay $1 and take a $35 coat or suit. We'll meet you in any and every way.

APOLOGY

With all our best efforts and our endeavors to the contrary, we have to admit that business on Saturday was of such a strenuous nature as to tax our staff—notwithstanding our having increased same to meet the pressure—beyond its powers. To those ladies whom we were unable to attend to with the efficiency and courtesy associated with the House of Herman's we tender our most sincere apologies and hope that they will favor us with another call tomorrow or later in the week. Please understand the stock is immense and Saturday's business has not run us short on anything. We still have a full range of sizes in everything—coats, suits, dresses and ensembles—and at all prices.
We received one thousand garments on Saturday and are putting same in stock for Monday's selling.

THIS IS A STORE-WIDE EVENT—We reserve nothing, restrict no one. All garments have their price tags on—pick what garment you like—and the second one you're going to take for the extra dollar. You know what price you wish to pay. Our salesladies will help you all they can but will coerce no one into buying what they don't require. Courtesy and service is our motto—and we live up to it. To get two garments—the finest and most fashionable—for one dollar more than the price of one alone—and on terms of 12 payments over three months—is something you cannot afford to ignore or pass by. We hope that every lady in Victoria will make a point of visiting the store this week.

UNDEVELOPED RESOURCES OF B.C. DETAILED

Mr. H. H. Stevens Tells Ottawa Audience of Vastness of Mineral and Agricultural Wealth Available

ONE PART OF NEW FIELDS IN CANADA

OTTAWA, April 20.—The vastness of Canada's resources was outlined before the Kiwanis Club here by Hon. H. H. Stevens, M.P., Vancouver. Indicative of the future possibilities of the nation, he instanced the great stretch of British Columbia territory north of the 56th parallel, roughly half of the province, in which lay a newly discovered anthracite coal area, recognized by experts as the richest field of its kind west of Pennsylvania.

He also pointed to valuable mineral deposits along the coast range separating British Columbia and Alaska, and a stretch of grazing land of millions of acres. There was also a wheat-growing area awaiting the plough which, at its low altitude, was probably the finest grain land in Canada.

And British Columbia, said the speaker, was but a small part of Canada which awaited the years of development bidden in the future. With Europe clamoring for ground to settle millions of her people, this new Northwest of Canada was looked on by economists as the natural domain of sturdy immigrants; it would be a new empire for colonization.

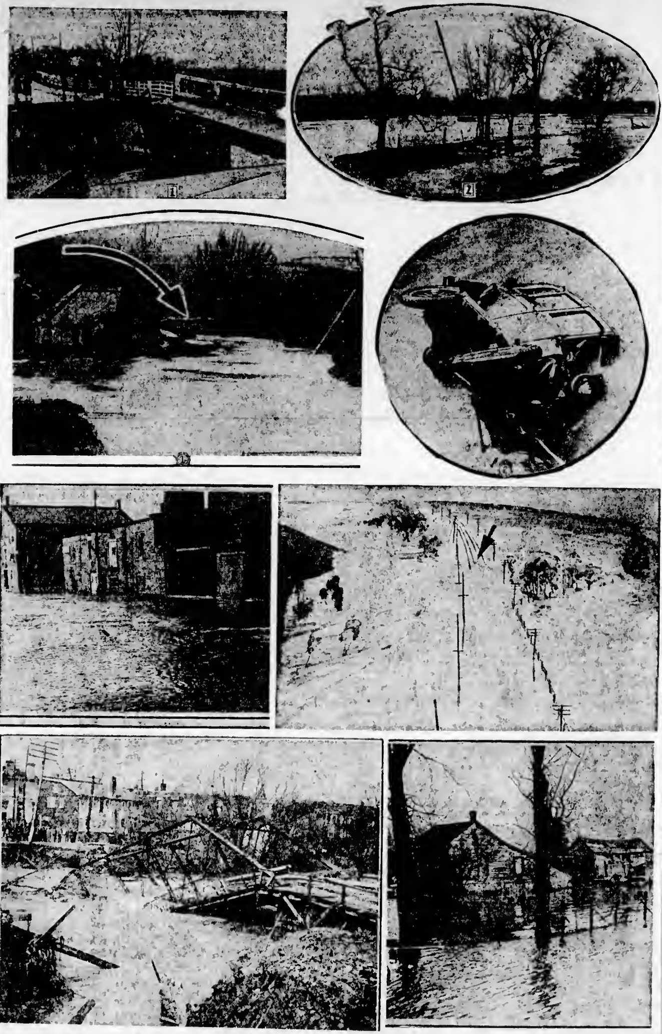
than five years who, through devotion to duty, self-sacrifice, public service or accomplishments in art, literature, invention or science, has contributed to the upbuilding of the community, or to the comfort of his or her fellow citizens, is eligible to be nominated for the honor of receiving the appreciation medal this year.

The Victoria Posts of the Native Sons and Native Daughters of British Columbia invite the public to submit nominations as soon as possible of local citizens whom they consider entitled to receive the award for good citizenship.

All nominations must be in writing, stating why the name has been submitted and why the nominee is deemed worthy of becoming the recipient of this high honor. Nominations must be sent to the Chairman of the Appreciation Award, Room 10, McGregor Block, Victoria. The letters will be treated as strictly private and will be referred to a special committee for selection.

The man or woman chosen as Victoria's best citizen for 1929 will be presented with the medal at some public function.

Spring Floods Take Heavy Toll Throughout Ontario



SPRING floods have taken a heavy toll of life and property in Ontario. Two persons lost their lives on April 6 when a car plunged over a wrecked bridge near Oshawa. At the top are seen the ruins of the bridge and the automobile swept 2,000 yards down stream. Another motor mishap is pictured below. In this case a man and a girl in a sedan just escaped with their lives; to the left is seen a washed out culvert and to the right the sedan lying on its side a few hundred feet away. From left to right below are: A street in Galt, flooded to a depth of four feet by the Grand River; the railway approach to Toronto along the Don River; the wreck of a large bridge at Newmarket, and a farmer's home near Guelph completely isolated when the Speed River went on a rampage.

Victoria Police Revolver Team Raises Its Average

Two Hundred Point Gain Made Over Last Year's Total in Dominion Competition for Police Team Markmanship Trophy

The Victoria police revolver team shot yesterday in the Dominion competition of the Chief Constable's Association. All police teams in the various cities throughout Canada enter this competition for the trophy donated by the Dominion Curtis Company.

Shooting under very trying circumstances on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police range at Esquimalt yesterday, the Victoria team, comprising Detectives Jack Rogers, Marcus Phipps, H Calwell, William Stark and Sergeant Hall, averaged 200 points better than their grand totals of last year.

The grand total for the shirt target, five shots in thirty seconds at twelve yards, was 356 points out of a possible 500. The grand total for the deliberate shoot at twenty yards, five shots in five minutes, was 768 out of a possible 1,000 points.

There was a strong wind blowing at the time, so that the Victoria team had to figure on wind pressure when aiming at the target.

Several good individual scores were made during the shoot. Detective Marcus Phipps in the shirt shoot made a possible twenty-five, while Detective Jack Rogers made twenty-four. Shooting under yesterday's conditions the individual scoring was considered by the judges to be exceptionally good.

On the deliberate shoot Detective Calwell made forty-four points out of a possible fifty, while Detective Stark also turned in a good score of thirty-six points in the same contest. Detective Phipps also did well in the deliberate shoot, making forty-six points out of the possible fifty. Sergeant T. Hall was another of the team to turn in a good card on the deliberate range. He made thirty-nine points out of a possible fifty.

Mr. W. N. Lenfesty and Dr. S. A. K. White were the judges, giving their services voluntarily. They have been the judges for the Victoria police team for a long time and their work is very much apppreciated.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

No Successor to Marshal Foch Is To Be Appointed

PARIS, April 20.—Foch's post as Marshal of France, probably will remain unfilled, as France's tribute to her saviour.

A half-hearted attempt to have the title passed on to General Weygrandt, "Foch's military son," as he is often called, has met with so much opposition that it is practically abandoned, and the French Government may announce itself in favor of allowing all of the marshal posts which become vacant by deaths to remain unfilled.

During and since the war, France has had eight marshals. Four are living—Joffre, Petain, Lyautey and Franchett D'Esperey.

Both the army and Government are agreed that eight is a number never to be exceeded if the glory of the title is to be kept. The army is in favor of a reduction of the number to one or two, by not filling the posts that become vacant.

"Why does a stork stand on one leg?"

"Why, if he lifted it, he'd fall down."

H. E. ALMOND ESTATE

VANCOUVER, April 20.—Disposing of a gross estate of $306,533 which nets $260,119, the will of Henry Elston Almond, former Vancouver alderman and prominent manufacturer, who died January 8 at Houston, Texas, has been filed in Supreme Court for probate.

PIMPLES BADLY AFFECTED FACE

Ashamed to Go Out. Lasted a Year. Cuticura Healed.

"My face was badly affected with pimples. When they first started they looked red and were hard. Later they became larger and soon began to pester me by itching. I scratched them which only caused more pimples. They disfigured my face so that I was ashamed to go out. The trouble lasted about a year.

"I read an advertisement for Cuticura Soap and Ointment so purchased some, and within two weeks there was a great improvement. I continued using them and within a month my face was completely healed." (Signed) Miss Katherine Klassen, Box 39, Conquest, Sask.

Use Cuticura to clear your skin.

Soap 25c. Ointment 25 and 50c. Talcum 25c. Sold everywhere. Sample each free. Address Canadian Depot: J. T. Wait Company Limited, Montreal. Cuticura Shaving Stick 25c.

A congregational social gathering will take place on Thursday evening next at Emmanuel Baptist Church. The church choir, under the direction of Mr. Fred Parfitt, will provide a programme and the Ladies' Aid Society will supply refreshments.

SLIGHT FOOD CHANGES AFFECT THE BODY TREMENDOUSLY

My grandniece weighed less at eight months than at birth, due to "infantile eczema." Was plastered with ointments and unbathed for seven months—entire household exhausted from lack of sleep. I added vegetable juice to each bottle feeding, nothing more. After two days she slept fourteen hours without waking. Ointments then discontinued, baths resumed. No rash, no itching in four years since. Why? Vegetable juice alkalinised her blood, killing the acid-caused eczema. Alkaline Roman Meal has kept her blood alkaline since.

Alkaline Roman Meal also saved my life when the great Osler told me twenty years ago I could not live four months. Now at seventy not two per cent of men thirty have muscles, strength or endurance equal to mine, built up out of alkaline Roman Meal. I'll send you a free booklet, "HOW TO KEEP WELL," and other literature, if you'll write for it to ROBT. G. JACKSON, M.D., 315 Vine Avenue, Toronto 9, Ont., or write for free sample of Roman Meal. Costly lotions not needed-now

It is so unnecessary to spend money on lotions to keep your hands smooth and lovely after dishwashing. There is a cheaper and better way. Use Lux in the dishwashing and banish that dishpan look—avoid the red rough appearance that spoils the natural beauty of your hands.

You will hardly notice the cost, for less than a cent's worth of Lux will do the whole day's dishwashing.

Huge Volume of Motor Manufacturing Shows Probable New Record

Indications at Present Point to a Total of Five Million Trucks and Cars for 1929, Reports From All Key Authorities Showing That Pessimistic Rumors Are Misplaced

Billions of Pounds of Commodities Used by One Firm During Last Year

(Copyright, 1929, by the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

DETROIT, April 20.—Despite faint rumblings of doubt that have been heard in the last week, automobile manufacturing apparently is sustaining the huge volume destined to make the year 1929 the first on record in which the total of cars and trucks will exceed five million. In the light of reports from key authorities that continue to be made, the stories that all is not right with the industry gain little credence. Several days ago in Toledo, the Great Lakes Regional Advisory Board, a co-operative industrial body whose aim is to expedite and regulate freight movement in the Middle West, listened to reports forecasting a 9.6 per cent business increase during April, May and June over the corresponding period of last year.

In connection with this, an estimate prepared by the traffic division of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce was submitted showing that freight car requirements of all the plants would be 36,500 cars greater this year than last, the total as calculated reaching 154,791.

This, it is pointed out, indicates that the March total of 595,000 cars and trucks, registering 20 per cent greater than the best previous period of the same length, is certain to be beaten in April and also indicates that the grand total of 1,154,857 for January, February and March, the first quarter, may be eclipsed by the end of June.

Some idea of what the record volume in automobile production means is conveyed in figures issued by the Chevrolet Motor Company, which show that during 1928, the sixteen plants producing the cars handled, required $46,000,000 worth of materials. This total was $11,000,000 greater than that of 1927. In 1928, the Chevrolet organization received 272,368 carloads of freight, comprising commodities of all kinds used for production purposes. In dead weight, this represented a movement of pounds running into billions—7,968,000,000 being the approximate figure.

These figures were the basis of the production by Chevrolet of 1,189,124 units shipped to dealers during the twelve months of 1928.

For this year, the scheduled production of Chevrolet was first set at 1,250,000 and has since been boosted to 1,350,000 cars and trucks.

Volume of Chrysler Corporation plants, according to Walter P. Chrysler, president, reached a total of 122,758 units in the first quarter of this year as compared with 112,977 in 1928. The increase in Chrysler and Dodge shipments combined was about ten per cent over the combined shipments in the same period of last year. Plymouth sales for the three months were 22,696 as against 23,076 last year.

In January, February and March, 42,000 Dodge cars were shipped, 16,000 being shipped in March.

General Motors Corporation has started real development of its "Automotive University," or what is officially known as the General Motors Institute of Technology, situated at Flint, where the Buick, Chevrolet and Fisher Body United States plants are located.

With the growth of the corporation's personnel from an average of 46,000 during 1921 to an average of more than 208,843 in 1928, has come the necessity of developing young men to handle major executive positions and giving them the requisite technical training.

"What makes the wheels of industry go around will always be men, no matter how automatic the machinery may become," is the way the idea is expressed by Albert P. Sloan, Jr., president.

The corporation maintains the building and equipment, as well as paying the salary of the director of the institute. Outside of that the institution is self-supporting, many of the students being able to pay their way through technical courses while holding jobs in the General Motors Corporation factories.

There are facilities for 2,800 day and evening school students. There are forty-two members of the faculty giving their entire time to the work and in addition sixty part-time instructors, who are men from the plants qualifying as experts in certain lines.

The reception of new members will take place at the close of the communion service. The usual weekly prayer meeting will be held on Wednesday.

D. C. Coleman Returns From P.G.E. Inspection

VANCOUVER, April 20.—A guest of the directorate of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway for a trip over the line, Mr. D. C. Coleman, vice-president Western lines, Canadian Pacific Railway, returned this morning after going to the end of rail at Quesnel and visiting Prince George by automobile. He will proceed to Victoria and return home to Winnipeg next week.

This was Mr Coleman's first trip over the P.G.E., and he declared this morning that the line gave every appearance of being well maintained and economically operated.

The vice-president said that no significance was to be attached to the trip.

Engineers of the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian National and the Provincial Government are entering the field to make a thorough survey of the territory served by the road. This engineering inspection was arranged by Premier S. F. Tolmie several months ago and from it important plans may emerge for future operation of the line.

Health and Diet Advice

By DR. FRANK McCOY

GOOD FOOD FOR THIRTY-ONE CENTS DAILY

In yesterday's article I gave you a menu which if repeated each day for a month would cost only $7.80 per person. This cost could be still further reduced with menus which would include large quantities of the dried cereals and legumes. From a health standpoint, many of these foods are not so desirable, although they may be used to a considerable extent in very cold climates.

Here is another menu today containing wholewheat bread as a cereal food, but still no legumes, as dried beans, etc.

INEXPENSIVE MENU, NO. 2

Breakfast — French omelette, Melba toast, stewed prunes.

Luncheon—Cabbage and beet soup, wholewheat bread and peanut butter, oleomargarined beets.

Dinner—Cottage cheese, stewed tomatoes (canned), salad of grated raw carrots on lettuce, Jell-O.

Eggs are fairly expensive items in this menu, but a French omelette large enough for three people can be made with three eggs by mixing the eggs with evaporated milk. Fifteen slices of Melba toast may be made from a ten cent loaf of bread, making each slice cost about two-thirds of a cent. Prunes or the other dried fruits are always in season and may be used to round out a meal. A breakfast as listed above would cost approximately twenty-seven cents for three people, or nine cents apiece.

I have listed cabbage and beet soup in the luncheon because a portion of the cabbage may have been used the previous day as cold slaw and, in order to prevent waste, the remainder should be used in some form at a subsequent meal. The cost of the luncheon listed above would be nineteen cents for three people, or 6 1-3 cents per person.

Cottage cheese is very wholesome protein, easily made from sour milk, if you cannot obtain the fresh cottage cheese. It is about the least expensive of all the proteins. Grated carrots are listed because carrots are inexpensive and can be obtained in any part of the world. If fresh tomatoes are not obtainable, canned tomatoes may be used, and if the entire can is not used at one meal, the remaining portion may be used the following day for tomato soup. Lettuce may be expensive in some parts of the world, in which case other fresh green leaves should be substituted for the sake of health. Jell-O or the other forms of gelatin are inexpensive desserts, and a ten cent package provides enough for three people. By purchasing gelatin in quantities this cost can be still further reduced. The cost of the dinner will be about forty-seven cents, or 16 2-3 cents per person.

These meals, if repeated daily for a month, would cost $9.50 per person, which is slightly more than the cost of those given in the first menu in yesterday's article.

The total cost of food per person for the entire day would be slightly over thirty-one cents. If the same menus were repeated each day for a month the cost would be only $29.50 for a family of three.

USE CARE CHOSING AND PLACING ROOF

Simple Pitched Form Has Many Advantages to Commend It to Home Builders

The most practical type of roof for the small house is a simple pitched roof—a roof that slopes two ways from the top. Such a roof forms gables at two ends of the house, and slopes to meet the tops of the walls at two sides. A roof of this kind should have a pitch of at least thirty per cent—that is, it should if the roof covering is of shingles or other overlapping material. If the roof covering is of metal, or of felt and tar, the pitch of the roof does not need to be so great. Of this, however, more anon.

The advantages of a simple pitched roof are these: Only two surfaces are presented to the weather, and properly pitched, water and snow quickly slide off these two surfaces; also, the simple pitched roof presents no valleys or depressions in which water can gather.

Architectural style, however, makes it impossible for a simple pitched roof to be used on a majority of the houses that are built. The architectural style of some houses demands a hipped roof—that is, one that slopes up from all four sides. Other houses—notably those built in the shape of an L—demand two roofs of varying heights that meet to form a harmonious whole. Still other styles demand that the roof lines be broken up with dormers—windows jutting through the roof.

VALLEYS ARE FORMED

On, or in, roofs of this kind are formed valleys, which are depressions where roof lines meet, and these valleys are the most vulnerable points in a roof, with the possible exception of that part of the roof that surrounds the chimney, and those parts which are broken up to let dormers through. Building science has, fortunately, long known means of weatherproofing vulnerable places in a roof. The means is called "flashing" and "counter flashing," two terms that do not reveal their functions. However, your contractor or architect will tell you precisely what flashing and counter flashing are; doubtless the architect or contractor will draw you a little sketch to make clear the function of both.

KEEPS RAIN OUT

The sketch notwithstanding, it is easy to tell you here that the purpose of flashing and counter flashing is to keep the rain off your head, and to keep your roof from decaying before its time.

Now, as to choice of a roofing material. If your roof is flat you will want a metal or felt and tar roof. The possibilities are, however, that your roof will have sufficient pitch to use one of the other types of coverings. Wood shingles, of course, have been a standard roofing material for many years, but in many communities they are forbidden by city ordinance. If you should use wood shingles, it is well to remember that the type of wood shingles that is soaked in oil is much more durable than the unsoaked type.

Of other kinds of overlapping roof coverings there are many. Some are made of tile, others of stone, others of asbestos, others of slate. From these, of course, you will select the kind that is best fitted to your purse and purpose.

TIMELY ADVICE ON CHOSING A PLAN

Ultimate Cost Must Determine Size of Rooms for Needed Accommodation

Two essentials absolutely govern the selection: Your requirements as regards the number of rooms needed to take care of your household today and in the future, and the sum you are able to invest in a home. One must have a sufficient number of rooms to insure privacy and convenience, without depending upon the use of one of the "public" rooms—living-room or den—to serve a double purpose, excepting in an emergency, but the size of those rooms will have to be governed by the ultimate cost.

Living-room and dining-room dimensions have minimum limits, based on the standard furniture for them and average maximum number they may be called upon to accommodate, this latter depending greatly upon how much entertaining is anticipated, though the number of times the average family will have more than three or four guests at one time is very small.

A combination living and dining-room makes for economy in building and is—with an attractive dining-nook—quite acceptable to many; others emphatically taboo the idea, objecting to preparing the table under the eyes of early guests, also the subsequent removal of dishes, etc.; it is purely a matter of choice and can be individually considered on the ground of construction economy and reduction in the number of rooms to care for.

Modern hotels are setting an example in the possible reduction in bedroom space by the adoption of narrower beds and the use of wardrobe cupboards which dispense with the use of bureaus, yet give ample and convenient accommodation for everything; the bed, a small dressing table, a desk or writing table and the necessary chairs comprise the furnishings without crowding, at a later date the convenience of wardrobe closets and other built-in features will be reviewed in more detail.

Kitchenettes are too familiar nowadays to warrant comment; they have their staunch advocates and equally staunch opponents, each right from the individual point of view; moderation is the only advice one can give, not too large, yet not too small; a kitchen combining "step-economy" without that feeling of being hemmed in.

The basement, whether it be all or partially excavated, can simply be the proverbial "cellar," a place to harbor rubbish and attract vermin or a well arranged unit of the home with its storage-room, fruit and vegetable room and laundry effectively separated from the furnace and fuel compartment and easily accessible from the upstairs and the garden.

Whatever the plan may be, the exterior, the picture of your home, must be pleasing to the eye, must have that balance and harmony which can only be attained by the trained architect; the interior arrangement is personal, but the perspective is public property; you owe it to your neighbors to add to the attractiveness of your community.

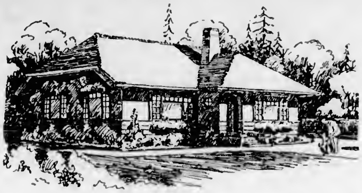
Question—What should be used to protect the underside of woodwork; and is it necessary to protect the underside?

It is not necessary, but it is good practice, and it is not expensive. A coat of linseed oil will provide the desired protection.

Question—We have ordered and received some floor joists from our lumber yard. These, however, seemed to be warped. Will it be safe to use them? We are told that it will.

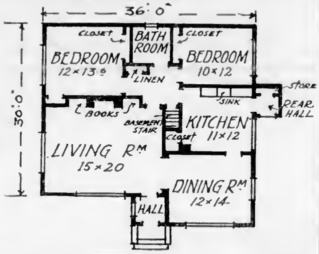
Warped floor joists are straightened by the use of sheathing, or subflooring, and by blocking and bridging. That the timbers you have received are warped is not unusual.

An Attractive Home in a Rustic Setting



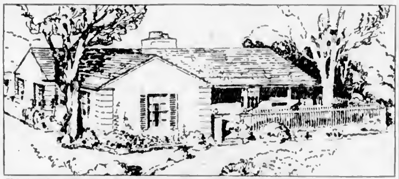
HOME PLAN NO. 507

The complete plans for this home, including working drawings and specifications, were prepared by the Architects' Small House Service Bureau (B.C.), Vancouver.



This plan shows a very economical arrangement of a five-room bungalow and gives large rooms throughout. The bedrooms have ample closet space. Hall, living-room and dining-room have hardwood floors, and the front entrance is finished with red tiles and brick steps. Bookcases in living-room. Wide double doors from living-room to dining-room. Large concrete basement, with wash-tubs and ample storage room. Hot-air heating, and provision for electric, gas or coal stove. Exterior, cedar siding, and shingled roof.

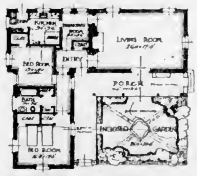
Charming Cottage With Enclosed Garden



This charming cottage has so simple and refined a character that it is difficult to conceive of a setting into which it would not fit naturally and beautifully. Prairies, hills, mountains—the little cottage would settle down among any of them, and its unpretentious charm would shine forth as effectively as it would were the cottage built on a city or suburban street.

Another important feature of the design is that it offers a choice of either stucco or wood siding for the exterior finish. The home-builder, therefore, should he choose to build this home, would have an opportunity of harmonizing its exterior finish with those of any adjacent houses.

A study of the floor plan will reveal that the layout of the house is as skillfully planned, from the viewpoint of convenience and comfort, as is the exterior of the house from the viewpoint of charm. The number of closets provided really is unusual in a house so small. The kitchen is compact and conveniently arranged; there is space for the refrigerator in the service entry; and the breakfast-room, which undoubtedly would be used for virtually all meals taken within the house, has entrances from the living-room, the kitchen and the front entry



Dimensions—Fifty-three feet wide by forty-eight feet deep.

Construction—Gypsum tile; fireproof and insulated wood frame.

Exterior—Colored stucco or wood siding.

Bathing Beauty's Complexion Secret

"I have now used Kruschen Salts for a long time, and think it is wonderful. Everyone tells me how well I look and what a beautiful skin I have. I tell them that it is thanks to your wonderful Kruschen Salts. I have just won a second prize in a bathing beauty competition of a leading newspaper. I shall use it always, and tell all my friends to do the same." —(Miss) A. B.

Original letter on file for inspection.

This is beauty's first secret—a good complexion comes from within. No need for creams or lotions—put the colour on from inside. Keep your blood pure and healthy with the daily dose of Kruschen, and beauty's reward will be yours—a clear skin, bright, sparkling eyes—the abounding joy of good health.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at drug and department stores in Canada at 75c. a bottle. A bottle contains enough to last for 4 or 6 months—good health for half-a-cent a day.

It is the things we haven't got that make us happy—so long as we can hope for them.—Cecil Roberts.

Prudence Says So

Some New-Fashioned Cookies—Another Rabbit Dish and a Recipe for a Healthy Child

The modern mistress of the kitchen isn't going to spend time keeping the cookie tin filled as her grandmother did, nevertheless there are quick ways of making cookies which are quite as good, if not better, considering all the good things she has to make these days. Fortunately they may be made without benefit of the rolling pin. Following are two particularly good ones.

* * *

Jelly Delights

Beat one egg and one cup of sugar until light. Flavor with vanilla or lemon and almond. Gradually add two and a half cups of pastry flour. Then knead in quarter of a cup of cold shortening until the dough is well blended. Form into a "sausage" roll and set in the ice box to harden overnight. Then slice with a sharp knife and bake in greased tins. Just before serving spread the under sides with jelly and put two and two together.

* * *

Icebox Cookies

One and a half cups of shortening, one cup brown sugar, one cup granulated sugar, three eggs, one teaspoon cinnamon, half a teaspoon salt, four and a half cups of flour, one and a half teaspoons soda, one cup chopped nuts. Cream shortening, add sugar, then beaten eggs. Mix well. Add dry ingredients, mixed with nut meats. Pack in a roll and set aside. Slice with a sharp knife and bake for twelve to fifteen minutes.

* * *

Cream Puffs

Boil together half a cup of butter, and one cup of water. While the mixture is boiling, stir in one cup of flour. Mix thoroughly and set aside to get cold. Drop in four eggs (one at a time), mixing each well. Add a little salt and drop by spoonfuls on a greased tin, each puff to be about one and a half inches apart. Bake thirty-five minutes in a fairly hot oven. Fill with whipped cream and sprinkle powdered sugar on top.

* * *

Pineapple Cream Pie

Half a cup of sugar, six tablespoons flour, three egg yolks, one cup grated pineapple (drain off the juice), three tablespoons butter, one and a quarter cups milk, juice of half a lemon. Mix sugar and flour, add pineapple, beaten yolks, butter and milk. Cook in a double boiler until thick. Remove from range, add the lemon juice and mix thoroughly. Cool and pour into a baked pie shell. Spread with a meringue made with three egg whites and six tablespoons of sugar. Bake for a few minutes.

* * *

Rabbit in Tomato Sauce

The Rabbit Breeders' Association sends the following recipe. Two tablespoons lard or butter, three tablespoons flour, one and a half cups tomato pulp and juice, one large onion (chopped fine), two teaspoons salt, half teaspoon pepper, three cups water, one large rabbit. Skin, clean and wash the rabbit and cut it into pieces at the joints. Dip in flour and brown in a little fat. Put the lard or butter in a deep skillet or a roasting pan, and stir in the flour. Add the chopped onion and the tomato juice with the seasonings and the boiling water and cook for five minutes. When this is boiling put in the browned rabbit. Cover and let simmer on the top of the stove or in the oven for one hour. The tomato sauce cooks down and gives a very good flavor to the rabbit.

* * *

Mrs H. W. Price, president of the Toronto Home and School Council, at a recent meeting of the Ontario Federation of Home and School Clubs, contributed this recipe: Ingredients, six children, three puppies, one field, one brook, one blue sky. Method. Take children and puppies and put them in the field, pour brook over pebbles and spread blue sky over all. Bake in hot sun, and when thoroughly brown set in a bathtub to cool. Isn't it delightful?

Salt Spring Socials

Mr. H. W. Bullock was host, with his sister, Mrs. E. A. Crofton, hostess, at a Conservative dinner given by him in honor of Hon. W. A. McKenzie and Colonel C. W. Peck, V.C., Wednesday evening at Harbor House, Ganges. The one large table was beautifully decorated with daffodils and Forsythia, shaded colored candles being used for the lighting. Thirty-one guests were present at the dinner, after which Miss Shirley Wilson rendered very prettily several pianoforte solos. Amongst those present, besides the guests of honor were Captain F. H. Walter, R.N., Mrs. Walter, Major and Mrs. F. C. Turner, Major Gus Lyons, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. E Walter, Dr. E. M. Sutherland, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. The Island property with house, known locally as Halley's Island, in Ganges Harbor, and owned recently by Mr. H. H. Hay, of Vancouver, has changed hands. The owners, Mr. and Mrs. Hague, of Vancouver will take up residence there during this month.

* * *

The old Kingsbury property on the Divide, Salt Spring Island, has just been purchased by Mr. F. W. Hewton, of Vancouver.

* * *

Dr. Morgan, who has been for several months at Ganges Harbor, left on Tuesday with his family for Vancouver.

* * *

Mr. Mulcahy, forestry inspector, accompanied by his wife and child, have rented and taken up residence at Ganges, on the property owned by Mr. Steven Carter, of Victoria.

* * *

Guests registered at Harbor House, Ganges. Mr. R. Bremner, Mr. H. Alder (Vancouver), Mr. A. Silverend (Montreal), Mrs. J. Howe (Kamloops), Mr. J. Mitchell, Colonel Cy Peck (Sidney), Mr. L. J. Russell, Miss W. Vyvyan, Miss Joan Carlin, Miss Joyce Mason, Miss Paula Loraine, Mr. Fred Coyne, Mr. S. Burl, Mr. Roy Shirley (Victoria).

* * *

Mrs. N. W. Wilson, of Salt Spring Island, is spending a few days at Deep Cove, the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Layard.

* * *

Miss S. G. Wyllie, of Vancouver, is spending a few weeks on Salt Spring Island, the guest of her sister, Mrs. G. B. Benson.

* * *

Major A. Rowan, of Ganges, left on Monday for a week's visit to Vancouver.

* * *

Misses Di and Doreen Crofton, Lois and Shirley Wilson, Gladys Borradaile, of Ganges, will leave on Monday for Victoria, where they will spend a day or two, guests at the Dominion Hotel.

* * *

After some days spent at Ganges, a guest at Harbor House, Captain A. B. Gurney returned home to Mayne Island last Tuesday.

* * *

Mrs. Charles McIntosh, of Ganges, leaves on Tuesday for the Old Country, where she will spend a few months in London, the guest of her sister.

* * *

Hon. W. A. McKenzie, of Penticton, and Major Gus Lyons, of Victoria, left on Friday after spending a day or two on the Island, the guests of Mr. H. W. Bullock, of Ganges.

THE POPULAR HOSTESS—

AFTER ALL, being a good hostess resolves itself chiefly into the matter of food and drink.

A Kelvinator in the kitchen means a good hostess in the drawing room. She can be serene, brilliant, charming—knowing that the more material phase of her party, the eating and drinking entertainment for her guests, will please them and add one more to her dinner triumphs.

Kelvinator means perfect food, which means perfect meals—an indispensable item in the qualifications of the perfect hostess.

For less than $270 you can own a Kelvinator. In saving of food and ice, you get your money back after a year or two.

Burgess Bedtime Stories

Yap Yap at Home

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

"Who is Yap Yap?" asked Peter Rabbit.

Wanderer the Evening Grosbeak looked down at him for a moment. "Yap Yap," said he, slowly," "is about the same relation to Johnny Chuck as Jack Rabbit is to you. Out where he lives they call him Yap Yap the Prairie Dog. But he isn't a dog at all. He and Johnny Chuck belong to the same family. So he is a sort of small cousin of Johnny Chuck."

"I suppose by that you mean," said Peter, "that he isn't as big as Johnny Chuck."

"That's just what I mean," replied Wanderer.

Peter was getting interested. "Does he look like Johnny Chuck?" he inquired.

"Enough like him so that you would know that he and Johnny Chuck were relatives," said Wanderer.

"Does he sit up like Johnny Chuck?" insisted Peter.

"My goodness, Peter, but you are full of questions!" replied Wanderer. "Yes, he sits up like Johnny Chuck, only more so. I mean by that, he spends more of his time sitting up than Johnny Chuck does."

"Of course, he lives in a hole in the ground," said Peter.

"Of course," replied Wanderer. "His hole is rather different, though. I think if you should get down into Yap Yap's hole, you would have difficulty in getting out."

"I don't have any difficulty in getting out of Johnny Chuck's hole," said Peter. "In fact, there is an old hole of Johnny Chuck's grandfather over in the dear Old Briar Patch. Sometimes Mrs. Peter and I use it in bad weather. If I can use an old house of Johnny Chuck's, I don't see why I should have any trouble with one of his cousin's houses."

"Johnny Chuck's hall goes down on a slant, doesn't it?" said Wanderer.

Peter nodded. "Doesn't Yap Yap's?" he asked.

"No," replied Wanderer. "It goes almost straight down and it goes down deep. At least, that's what I've been told. It isn't quite straight down, but it is pretty near it. Then it branches off 'way down deep. Yap Yap isn't much like Johnny Chuck in one thing."

"My goodness, Peter, but you are full of questions!" replied Wanderer

"What is that?" asked Peter.

"Yap Yap likes company," replied Wanderer. "You don't find Yap Yap living by himself. He wants a lot of his relatives living right close by, so that he can go visiting whenever he feels like it, and that is pretty often. Did you ever see the home of Banker the Swallow in a sandbank?"

"Certainly," replied Peter. "You mean, of course, the Swallow who lives in a sandbank. He always has a dozen or two of his friends living in the same bank. What has that got to do with Yap Yap the Prairie Dog?"

"Only that Yap Yap has his friends around him just the same way. Their homes are so close together that it is only a few steps from one to another. That is the way Yap Yap likes to live," explained Wanderer. "Each house has a nice mound around it and on these mounds Yap Yap and his friends like to sit and gossip, while they keep watch for enemies. Johnny Chuck wouldn't like it at all there. Johnny likes to be by himself too much. You ought to see Old Man Coyote and Mrs. Coyote hunting Prairie Dogs. I saw them doing it once."

INSTITUTE HEARS ADDRESS ON PLANTS

Mr. E W White, of the Department of Agriculture, Parliament Buildings, addressed the meeting of the Victoria Women's Institute on Friday on "The Culture and Care of House Plants," telling in an interesting way the best location for house plants, size of pots to use, soil most plants require, watering and growth, diseases and insects which may attack and how to control and check them. He also gave a description of the handling of foliage plants most usually grown, such as the types of asparagus fern, Boston fern, holly fern, aspidistra, wandering Jew, rubber plant and Kencha palm; the flowering plants such as Christmas cactus, begonias, many varieties of cyclamen, primulae, calla lily, geraniums and bulbs. Members asked questions and received much good advice in return. A very hearty vote of thanks was given Mr White at the conclusion of his address.

Among the correspondence was a letter from the Y.W.C.A. asking a representative to attend a meeting arranged for May 3 to discuss plans for a two-day fair at the Armories. Mrs Peden was asked to attend for the Victoria Women's Institute. In response to a letter from the secretary of the Social Service League a donation will be sent to its building fund.

One new member was received and another member rejoined.

Mrs. Brown reported the March and April concerts in the T.B. Ward of Jubilee Hospital. These were very good concerts and refreshments were served to the patients. Next month's concert is being arranged.

Mrs. Urquhart reported progress in obtaining rug wools and patterns for members, and a meeting will be called for those interested soon. The classes for the use of sewing machine attachments are to be held on May 9 and 10 in the institute rooms. There will be nine or ten in each class, and many are looking forward to the visit of the instructress.

Some members were reported ill, and some were welcomed back after illness.

Mrs Arnold reported a pleasant social afternoon, April 5, when a programme was given and many attended. The May 3 social will be arranged by Mrs. Palmer, Mrs. Adam, Mrs. LeRoy and Mrs. Brinn as hostesses.

Mrs Laird, for the ways and means committee, reported three successful card parties, and plans arranged for the lunch and tearoom at the flower show at the Willows next Friday and Saturday, also a home-cooking stall Saturday morning, May 4, and asked the ladies to bring their donations for this to the social meeting on May 3. A vote of thanks was heartily given to the ways and means committee, which worked so well during the first three months of the year.

Mrs. Wilkinson gave a short report of the recent conference of the National Council of Education, mentioning the prominent speakers.

A short report of recent interesting League of Nations news was given by Mrs. Palmer, the convener.

The speaker for May 11 will give an address on some phase of education.

Mrs. J. D Gordon spoke of her visit to Cobble Hill Women's Institute, and to Qualicum Beach district and Courtenay, where a new institute was organized in place of the institute disbanded several years ago.

Most of the sewing for the Women's Auxiliary of the Solarium has been returned, and also a woolen vest knitted for the auxiliary.

Mrs. Terry, the president was in the chair, and there were twenty-two members present.

Include a Trellis
In Your Gardening Plans

Increase the comfort and safety of your home with a new roof. Johns-Manville Flexstone Asbestos Shingles are fireproof, can be laid directly over the old shingles and are unusually beautiful and durable as rock.

What's the use of growing a beautiful garden if you haven't the setting for a "garden beautiful?" Good lumber can help you. A trellis for instance. Not just an ordinary "garden variety" trellis but a symphony of wood over which vines will soon be clambering . . . or quaint flower boxes . . . comfortable garden seats . . . a lattice fence to make delightfully secluded that little patch of green . . . a picket fence to shut out dogs and keep inviolate those flower beds you've so carefully tended . . . or a snug little walk from the lane to the back door.

Plan your garden now . . . plan to use lumber. We will be pleased to show you how we have helped others make their gardens more attractive with Summer houses, trellises and fences, built by Lemon, Gonnason Master Craftsmen. The cost is small. Phone 76.

RAIN AGAIN INTERFERES WITH MAJOR LEAGUE BALL

Sons of Canada Will Battle Jokers in Opening Game of Senior Ball League

Championship Squads Of Last Year to Hook Up Monday, May 13

Canadians, Winners of Senior League, and Jokers, Commercial Titleholders, Expected to Put Up Good Tussle

SONS of Canada vs. Jokers That's how the teams will line up in the curtain raiser of the 1929 baseball season in the opening of the Victoria Senior Amateur Baseball League. With the champions of last year's senior and commercial loops, respectively, drawn to clash in the opener, there is every promise of an interesting struggle.

Manager Jack Bacon, of the Canadians, has all of last season's players back in the fold, and all are anxious to get back in harness. The same may be said for Manager Dave Donaldson and the Jokers.

At the present time in the Sons of Canada camp there is a shortage of twirlers, but Manager Bacon stated last night that this trouble will be overcome ere the curtain goes up on the present season. Among the players who will appear in the Canadians' uniforms are Bill Holman, Colin Campbell, Kim Campbell, Jim D'Arcy, Ralph Mawhinney, George Gandy, Johnny Kerr, Jim Post, Bert Nex, Bill Emery and Jack Bacon.

The Jokers, who will have the majority of last year's in action again, are expected to make things interesting for the Sons of Canada. Mummery, Donaldson and Pollard are already lined up on the heaving staff, but it is understood that Manager Donaldson has something better than his arm up his sleeve. Other players, in addition to the pitchers, include Archie Hubbard, "Speed" Behnson, Barry, "Hap" Rivers, Hughie Devereaux, Claude Belcher, Elmer Smith and Collins.

The second game of the league schedule will see the Tillicums opposing the Eagles, while Sidney will have a bye in the first round.

RING TITLES HELD BY EAST

Most of Laurels at Canadian Boxing and Wrestling Won by Eastern Canada Competitors

PORT ARTHUR, April 20.—Three knights of the padded fist owing allegiance to Ontario, brought home Canada-wide laurels tonight during the last joust of the three-day boxing and wrestling tourney. Middleweight, welter and flyweight titles were annexed tonight by Ontario, while heavy and bantam crowns had been won during the earlier two days.

Harold Stewart, Montreal featherweight, who successfully defended his 1928 title on Friday night, is the only Canadian mitt champion for 1929 from outside Ontario.

Lightweight and heavy mat honors went to Ontario, but Jimmy Trufinov, of Regina, for the seventh time Canada's bantam champion, retained his grappling title for the West. Following is the list of 1929 champions as result of the three-day tourney.

BOXING

Heavyweight—Joe Carrow, Kenora.
Light-heavyweight—None
Middleweight—Harry Backs, of Toronto.
Welterweight—Angie McLeod, Fort William
Lightweight — Johnny Wilson, Winnipeg.
Featherweight — Harold Stewart, Montreal.
Bantamweight—Bobby Crothers, Sarnia.
Flyweight — Malcolm Mathieson, Toronto.

WRESTLING

Bantamweight—Jimmy Trufinov, Regina.
Featherweight — Johnny Raho, Regina
Lightweight — Howard Thomas, Montreal
Welterweight — Bjorn Johnson, Winnipeg.
Middleweight—None.
Light-heavyweight—None.
Heavyweight — Hans Lindberg, Port Arthur.

Capitals to Practice

The Victoria Capitals baseball team will hold a practice this morning at the Royal Athletic Park at 11 o'clock. All of last year's players and others interested are requested to attend.

Three Ex-Champs Say Loughran Is Logical Contender for Throne

Jack Johnson, Tommy Burns and Jack Dempsey Assert That Light-Heavyweight Champion and Sharkey Only Two Heavies in Sight

By TOMMY LOUGHRAN
Light-Heavyweight Champion of the World
(Copyright, 1929, by the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

I made a trip from Miami just to attend the unveiling of the Muldoon-Tunney Trophy in New York. As everyone interested in sports undoubtedly knows, this huge silver and marble affair bears the names of all the heavyweight champions from John L. Sullivan on. Several of us are hopeful that our names will be engraved on the base.

Only three former heavyweight champions were present—Tommy Burns, Jack Johnson and Jack Dempsey. Naturally they began talking about the coming champion. Now these three know their fistic onions as well as anyone in the game, and they admitted that there were only two possibilities. One is Jack Sharkey, the other myself.

Dempsey didn't hesitate in expressing his opinion that I would outbox Sharkey. Johnson thought maybe the Boston sailor's advantage in weight might make a difference.

At that Tommy Burns piped up: "Weight makes a difference of course, but there probably wouldn't be more than ten or twelve pounds between Loughran and Sharkey. You know, I weighed 169 when I fought Johnson down in Australia, and he weighed 208. That sort of thing makes a difference—but ten pounds won't."

That has been my contention right along. Most of the newspapermen, these champions and a lot of other people recognize me as one of the leading contenders for the heavyweight title. But the fighters themselves sheer away. Joe Smith, my manager, and I, suggested to all the promoters who are offering me large sums to fight Braddock, Griffiths, Walker and others in defence of my light-heavyweight championship, that I am more eager to meet—and willing to accept less money for those meetings—any of the outstanding big fellows. Sharkey would be my first choice, but Max Schmeling, K. O. Christner, Johnny Risko or Jim Maloney would be equally agreeable to me.

It seems to me that since I have given all of the challengers a chance by defending my title half a dozen times in fifteen months, the New York Commission should sanction my meeting heavyweights. The milk fund show would be an excellent shot against any of the big fellows I have mentioned. Why the deadline?

Jack Delaney, Paul Berlenbach and Mike McTigue, my predecessors on the throne of the 175-pound class, were all permitted to do that. Why not I—particularly as I have proved my ability to handle them?

Well, the break is bound to come soon, and I'll be ready for it. That's all any man can say, and from what I have seen among the heavyweights my best should not fare so badly.

Davis Continues To Lead Newman In Cue Tourney

LONDON, April 20.—During yesterday's play in the final match of the English professional billiards championship tournament, Joseph Davis continued to maintain his narrow lead over Thomas Newman. Davis was at the table at the close of play and had 16,300 points to his credit, while newman had 15,872. The match is for 16,000 points up.

Canadian Senior Hoop Series to Be Played on Coast

VANCOUVER, April 20.—The Canadian senior men's basketball championship finals will be played in New Westminster, April 29 and May 1. The dates were telegraphed to George Winter, Western vice-president of the Canadian Basketball Association, by W. A. Alldritt, chairman, this morning. Windsor Collegiate, present titleholders, who defeated the British Columbia Varsity team in the finals last year, are expected to oppose Westminster Adanacs in the series at the Royal City.

SOFTBALL LEAGUE ENTRIES TO CLOSE ON TUESDAY NIGHT

President Ralph Butler of the Victoria and District Softball League, announced last night that the next meeting of the league will be held in the Y.M.C.A. on Tuesday at 7:30 o'clock. All teams intending to enter for the present season must have their entry filed on or before this date.

In addition to the acceptance of entries, plans will be formulated for a juvenile section as well as the ladies' division of the city league. All interested are invited to attend.

Wins Fishing Contest

HERMOSA BEACH, Calif., April 20.—Bert Cutter, twenty-five, of Hermosa Beach, won the endurance fishing contest here with an elapsed time, without sleep of eighty-seven hours and five minutes. He caught 118 pounds of fish.

Henry Rabe, of Tulare, Calif., was runner-up to Cutter, with eighty-six hours and fifty minutes sleepless fishing time. He beat the champion in the number of pounds of fish caught, however, having accumulated fourteen more. The twenty-six entrants in the race hauled 1,048 pounds of fish over the barge railing during the four days of the contest.

169,500 Watch Eight Opening Major Contests

NEW YORK, April 20.—The attendance total of 169,500 persons for the eight opening major league baseball games this season is the lowest in several years. Although 40,000 fans turned out for the delayed inaugural between the New York Yankees and the Boston Red Sox on Thursday, only 8,000 saw the Boston Braves open against Brooklyn at the Hub, and the New York Giants and Phillies played to only 6,000 at Philadelphia.

SOUTH AFRICAN IN PYLE DERBY STRUCK BY AUTO

Arthur Newton Is Forced From Race After Holding Ninth Place in Elapsed Time—Simpson Wins Lap

THREE LEADERS FINISH IN TIE

MARSHALL, Ills., April 20.—Over the thirty-three-mile stretch from Brazil, Indiana, to Marshall, Paul Simpson, of Burlington, N.C., led the pack in the "bunion" derby today, making the jaunt in 4:31:45, and strengthening his hold on sixth place.

Peter Gavuzzi, of England, leader of the field; Ed Gardner, Seattle negro, who is in second place, and Johnny Salo, who is in third place, ended today's run tied for second place. Their time was 4:51:10.

Other leading entries finished the lap in this order: M. B. McNamara, Australia, third; Sam Richman, New York, fourth; P. Granville, Hamilton, Ont., fifth.

The derby field was reduced to twenty-nine today, when Arthur Newton, of Rhodesia, South Africa, was struck by an automobile. Newton, who had been ninth in total elapsed time, suffered a dislocated shoulder.

Softball Practice

The McMaster-Horton Royals, last year's softball champions, will hold a practice this morning at the Central Park at 10 o'clock. Members of last year's squad and any new material are invited to attend.

Elizabeth Robinson, aged sixteen, of Chicago, established a new world's record at the Olympic games at Amsterdam when she won the women's 100-metre dash in 12 1-5 seconds.

COAST LEAGUE

LOS ANGELES, April 20.—Successive singles by Earl Webb, Walter Berger and "Slug" Tolson, in the tenth inning, broke up an exciting pitching battle and gave Los Angeles a 3-2 win over Sacramento, here today. The game was a hurling duel between Pudgy Gould, Sacramento spitballer, and "Red" Roberts, who was retired for a pinch hitter in the ninth. Wilbur Peters relieved him, the pair holding the Solons to five hits. One of the safeties was a home run, however, Joe Harris, veteran outfielder, poling for the circuit with one man on in the fourth. It was Harris' fourth four-bagger in as many games.

	R.	H.	E.
Sacramento	2	5	3
Los Angeles	3	10	0

(Ten innings)

Batteries—Gould and Koehler; Roberts, Peters and Hannah, Sandberg.

Fifth Straight Win

PORTLAND, April 20.—The Missions made it five straight from the Beavers today, winning behind Bert Cole's excellent pitching, 4 to 1. Knight also was in good form, but in two innings bunched hits drove in two runs each time.

TIJUANA RACE FIGHT UNDER WAY IN SOUTH

Battle for Control of Racing in Lower California Looming Between Coffroth and Agua Caliente Promoters

NEW ORGANIZATION HAS BIG PROGRAMME

TIA JUANA, Mexico, April 20.—With "Sunny Jim" Coffroth, president of the Tia Juana Jockey Club, lined up on one side and a new combine headed by Wirt O. Bowman on the other, a war for control of horse racing in Lower California loomed today.

That such a war is in the offing came with the announcement of the organization to the Agua Caliente Jockey Club. Bowman was named as president. Associated with him are Baron Long and Jimmy Crofton.

AMBITIOUS PROGRAMMES

The Agua Caliente organization has already outlined an ambitious racing programme, even announcing a $100,000 handicap race which is to be called the Bowman Handicap.

Coffroth is reported to be at Mexicali, where he is seeking to find out whether Governor Rodriguez has given the Bowman organization his official approval.

Each year a revolt has threatened against Coffroth but so far he appears to have held the trump cards. What the outcome of the present move will be is problematical. Coffroth is known to have good connections at Mexico City, and be expected to wage a strong fight to control racing in the northern part of Lower California.

Higher and Wider Wickets In O.C. Cricket Suggested

Special Committee of Governing Body Says Changes Would Help Speeding Up of Game—Boundary Rule to Be Altered

LONDON, April 20.—Higher and wider wickets are among the changes suggested by a special sub-committee of the governing body of cricket in England, which has been considering ways and means of brightening up the game. One of the problems they have looked carefully into is the mastery of day over the ball, which has made for many slow games ending in draws. The committee interviewed all the leading cricket club officials and is now prepared to recommend that the following changes be made in county cricket this season:

Wickets to be an inch higher and an inch wider.

That a new ball be awarded to the fielding side after 150 runs have been scored instead of 200 runs.

That the boundary immediately behind the bowler's arm be limited to eighty yards, stretching at right angles with side boundaries.

INTERNATIONAL SOCCER EXHIBITION WON BY U.S.

Victoria All-Stars Lose to Washington Eleven by 2-1 Score

American "Rep" Soccer Eleven Puts Up Good Display Against Locals in Exhibition Match—Doyle Nets Two for Visitors

Netting the leather once in each half, Doyle, clever inside right of the Washington State all-star soccer aggregation, gave his teammates a 2-1 victory over a local "rep" squad in an exhibition game at the Royal Athletic Park yesterday afternoon, before about 1,000 fans. Glancy, centre forward for Victoria, registered their lone tally early in the second half. The visitors, heavier and faster than the local squad, snared what might be termed a lucky win, with Banks, their goalie, shining. Somewhat shakey in the opening half, this veteran of the sticks settled down in the second part of the match and turned in a phenomenal performance. To say the least of his efforts, he literally broke the hearts of the local forwards as they rained bullet drives at him from all ranges. Hetherington, at the other end of the field, turned in a creditable performance, and the two goals that beat him were the result of masterly ball control and good soccer.

Victoria won the toss and decided to play with the wind at their backs. However, despite this handicap, the visitors took up the early offensive play and DeCosta, left half, cleared twice in quick succession. The locals went on the attack forllowing a clearance by Harper, and Tommy Smith headed the leather over the bar after Stewart had centred. It was a clever play and one that drew the plaudits of the fans.

GOOD CHANCE MISSED

Still on the offensive, Victoria looked dangerous when Glancy, after carrying the ball for quite a distance, swung it out to Mulcahy at the wing, but the latter skied it over the crossbar.

A free kick awarded the locals was wasted when Mulcahy booted the ball well over the goal.

Washington finally broke up this offensive play, and Sandy Russell, inside left, went down the field like a flash, drew the defence towards him and then lobbed the leather in front of the goal. Doyle came in fast and beat Hetherington when only a few feet from the goal.

Glancy tested Banks with two stinging shots in succession, but he cleared. Shortly following, "Pat" Mulcahy sent in a bullet drive from the wing, which the Washington goalie handled in fine style. The half-time whistle sounded shortly after, with the visitors on the long end of a 1-0 count.

Washington broke like a storm following the resumption of play, and Williamson hit the edge of the crossbar with a stinging shot and the ball rebounded back into play.

GLANCY SCORES

Victoria went on the offensive, and Glancy cleverly manoeuvred his way through the visiting squad and planted the leather in the net for Victoria's first and only counter. This goal was the means of putting life into what up to this time had been a listless game.

With the score tied, the teams fought like Trojans for the winning counter. Banks, guarding the citadel for Washington, and Hetherington, for Victoria, were each tested with many hard shots, but the visiting goalie had the larger share of the work. Glancy, John Watt, Stewart, Mulcahy and even Tommy Smith, who was crippled late in the opening half, tested Banks, but he was safe.

Washington netted the winning goal fifteen minutes from time, when Doyle picked the corner of the net with a well-placed shot at close range. Victoria, in the fight all of the way, tried hard to equalize, but the final blast of Referee McMillan's whistle found the score 2-1 in favor of the visitors.

McMillan refereed, and the teams were:

Washington State—Banks, Perry, Wargo, Dreke, Farmer, Williams, Simpson, Doyle, Williamson, S. Russell and J. Russell.

Victoria — Hetherington, Crowe, Harper, Reg Shanks, Preston, DeCosta, Stewart, John Watt, Glancy, Smith and Mulcahy.

SARAZEN TURNS IN FINE SCORE

American Ryder Cup Golfer Plays Fine Game—Farrell and Hagen Fail to Show Real Form

DEAL, England, April 20.—The American Ryder Cup golfers today concluded their period of training on the Southeast English Coast. They played a round over the Royal Cinque Ports course. They were looking for wind, and they found it. It was chilly too. Gene Sarazen, with an incoming score of 35, played the best golf of the day, after taking 38 for the first nine. With Lord Alistair Inneanker for a partner, Sarazen went down to a three and two defeat by Al Espinosa and Douglas Grant, the American amateur resident in London. Espinosa matched Sarazen's 73.

GENE SARAZEN

Joe Turnesa and Diegel defeated Horton Smith and Ed Dudley two and one. Turnesa took 74 and Diegel 75. Neither Walter Hagen nor Johnny Farrell played particularly good golf. Farrell used 77 strokes and Hagen 78. Farrell and Al Watrous won from Hagen and John Golden, one up.

KINGSTON STREET TENNIS COURTS TO BE IN USE TODAY

Weather permitting, the Kingston Street tennis courts will be open today for play at 10.30 o'clock. The official opening, scheduled for yesterday, was postponed, and will take place next Saturday. The courts will be open all this week.

Schmeling-Paolino Go To Have Glamour Of Championship Mix

Ballyhoo Over German and Colorful Spaniard Should Attract Thousands, Trumbull Says—Half of Proceeds to Go to Charity

By WALTER TRUMBULL
(Copyright, 1929, by the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

It looks as if there might be another battle of the century. When Paulino and Schmeling face each other at the Yankee Stadium on June 27, the 600 millionaires and the 60,000 fans of less imposing financial resources should all be in their places. The bout will be held for the Milk Fund, under the auspices of Madison Square Garden. This makes it a charity affair for everybody except the customers.

MAX SCHMELING

The fight was made possible by the fact that the Dempsey-Cole-Fugazy combination and Jess McMahon waived all rights on Schmeling for this particular bout. The men will fight for a percentage of the gross. Bulow will get his 20 per cent, Jacobs his 7 1-3 per cent, and Rose his 8 per cent of Schmeling's share. Those are the monetary portions into which the German boxer now is sliced. Bulow, as the manager accepted by the Boxing Commission, will sign the papers. Jacobs will probably handle the German in the ring.

GARDEN TO RUN BOUT

There was considerable consideration of the matter by the commission before the affair finally was arranged. The Fugazy interests at one time offered either to run the affair for nothing or to go into partnership with the Garden on the promotion; but William F. Carey stood firm. He said that the Garden Corporation could consider no partnership arrangement on the promotion of any boxing bout. The Garden has the two big New York parks, which was a powerful factor in any argument. Finally it was agreed that the Garden would run this bout, but that Dempsey and his associates and Jess McMahon should in no way be considered to waive any of their claims for the future.

"I don't care who runs this bout," said Dempsey afterwards, "just so the kids get the milk."

The kids will get the milk, but the Garden will get part of the cream. Net profits will be split equally between the Garden and the Milk Fund. In other words, the Garden will run the show and give half of what it makes to this charity. This may not sound very generous until you stop to consider that the Garden, controlling at least one of the fighters and the stadium, might put on a heavyweight show of its own on the date selected and give none of the profits to anybody. And the Fund will make a lot more out of the arrangement than if it tried to run a show exclusively on its own.

CHAMPIONSHIP GLAMOR

So great has been the ballyhoo over Schmeling that, while no title is directly involved, this will have the glamor of a championship fight. The youngster is still, of course, in Germany, and Joe Jacobs has only given the commission the assurance that he will do his utmost to bring him back; but the chances are overwhelmingly in favor of his return. He now has a shot at some important money, and money has a persuasive voice.

William F. Carey believes that the interest in this bout will be such that the commission will allow the top prices for ringside seats. That means that those who sit within sniffing distance of the rosin are likely to pay anywhere from twenty-five to fifty dollars for the space they occupy. It is not unlikely that the maximum will be somewhere between these two figures.

This will be Schmeling's real test. If he can flatten the tough Paulino, there will be a fortune ahead of him. If Paulino should prove that Schmeling is only a German mark, then little Paul will be in the front rank of contenders for the title Gene Tunney laid aside.

The bout appears to promise action. Paulino is an aggressive type, and anyone who climbs in a ring with him has to do some fighting. It is not unlikely that Schmeling's advisers rely heavily on Paolino's style. They figure that he is sure to come pounding in and that Schmeling will catch him when he does with that right hand.

The Basque thinks Schmeling will be easy, but one of Paulino's attractions as a fighter is that he thinks he can trim them all. Little Paul is as game as they come.

NANAIMO DEFEATS JAMES ISLAND IN CUP SOCCER 8-0

NANAIMO, April 20.—Nanaimo Southend Foresters defeated the James Island junior football team here in the semi-final for the O. B. Allen Cup by 8-0. All goals were scored in the first half of the game, the visitors being so clearly outclassed that Nanaimo forwards did not press during the second half. The winners will, early in May, play the final for the cup here against the Mainland junior winners.

THIS BALL—
DIDN'T HAVE A CHANCE
BUT THIS ONE—
DID!

What are the fundamentals of good putting?

Answered by
PHIL GAUDIN

Take a stance well over the ball. Hit it firmly so that it travels. Too many players are afraid to do more than kiss a ball with a putter and, as a result, it either rolls short of the hole or is deflected by a tiny tuft of grass or bit of dirt which would have had no effect on it had it been given more momentum. The old rule of "never up, never in" is a good one to follow. Certainly if a ball doesn't get as far as the hole it has no chance of getting in, whereas it does have some chance if overshot.

Protest Filed by St. Andrews Is Not Upheld by B.C.F.A.

NANAIMO, April 20.—The British Columbia Football Association, in session here tonight, dealt with a protest filed by St. Andrews, of Vancouver, covering their Province Cup match at Victoria last week against Esquimalt. After a lengthy discussion the protest was thrown out.

The protest, it was said, declared that Ralph Alcock, the referee of the game in question, awarded St. Andrews a goal and then changed his decision when Esquimalt players protested his judgment; and also that he conferred with the Esquimalt linesman only when the decision was altered. Other points brought out were that the nets were not in order, and that the referee admitted having no watch.

Washington Heavy Hitter Fails to Connect in Four Trips—Paul Waner Moves Up

Rain fell alike on the Eastern and Western players of the Big Six and washed out all chances of the members except Paul Waner and Goose Goslin. Waner took advantage of opportunity to do his first real hitting of the season and moved ahead of Babe Ruth in the standing. The Goose failed for the first time this year, showing a blank in four attempts. It dropped his average to .375 for a tie with Hornsby for second place. Rain, which stopped the Yankees-Athletics game left Lou Gehrig at the top with .600, and put Ruth at the bottom, with .167.

NANAIMO AND WESTS BATTLE TO 2-2 DRAW

Juvenile Soccer Teams Play for Second Time to Deadlock in Provincial Semi-Finals

THIRD GAME WILL BE PLAYED LATER

For a second successive time, the Victoria West and Nanaimo High School juvenile soccer teams failed to come to an agreement in the semi-finals of the provincial series, when they battled to a two-all draw yesterday afternoon at the Royal Athletic Park after ten minutes' overtime. According to officials another game will be played on a neutral field on a later date.

Both teams displayed some fine soccer, with neither squad having any edge on the play. The Wests were leading at halftime by a 1-0 score, but soon after play was resumed the visitors equalized the count. One of the visiting backs put Victoria in the lead by driving the leather into his own net halfway through the period. Ten minutes from time the Up-Islanders checked home the equalizer on a foul shot. Victoria had the edge in the extra session but could not drive home the winning tally.

From the opening blast Nanaimo went on the offensive and Watson, centre forward, had the first shot, but Spencer, the West's goalie, was safe. Mosdell, fleet right winger, just missed a goal when he skied over the crossbar from close in. Play reversed and Victoria attacked for the next fifteen minutes, Beck, the visitors' net minder, being kept busy hopping from one side to the other saving shots. However, finally Stevens, inside right for the Wests, sent a wicked drive goalward that completely baffled the goalie.

Shortly afterwards the Nanaimo goalie had a narrow escape when he saved a beautiful drive but fumbled it while trying to clear. Like a flash three of the local forwards were in on top of him. He fell to the ground and held the ball until the referee blew for a free kick. Just before halftime Victoria scored a second goal, but it was disallowed when the referee claimed one of the local forwards fouled a visiting back as the shot crashed into the net. Victoria West was leading 1-0 when the rest period was reached.

NANAIMO EQUALIZES

Five minutes after play resumed Nanaimo equalized the score when Watson beat Spencer with a low shot from close range. Only a few minutes elapsed when the Wests again took the lead. Walford, right halfback, in an attempt to clear, kicked the leather into his own net. With the goal lead the locals played defensive football, while the opposition forced at every opportunity. A foul shot just outside the penalty area five minutes from time robbed Victoria of victory. Green, Nanaimo centre half, took the shot and drove the ball into the net at a fast clip. The Victoria goalie just managed to tip the leather with his fingers. With time drawing near the Up-Islanders pressed hard for the winning goal but their efforts were in vain.

Ten minutes was agreed upon, so that the second game could get under way. The West played rings around the visitors in the extra session but failed to break the tie. J. R. Kelly, of Nanaimo, refereed, and the teams follow:

Nanaimo—Beck, Kelly, Dixon, Walford, Green, Whyman, Mosdell, Horn, Watson, Wheatcroft and Kerr.

Victoria West—Spencer, Luttrell, Brown, Graves, Fraser, Coates, Colgate, Stevens, Brackett, Rosemus and McInnes.

OREGON BOWLERS TAKE OPEN LEAD

O'Leary's Legionaires From Salem Take Eighty-One-Point Lead in Bowling Congress at Vancouver

VANCOUVER, B.C., April 20.—O'Leary's Legionaires from Salem, Ore., bumped the sticks for a total of 2,783 to take the lead in the open event of the International Bowling Congress here tonight. They supplanted the two Portland teams, which rolled 2,704 the night before. The Salem squad put over three steady games of 939, 928 and 914.

Six teams from Salem occupied the alleys on the shift tonight, but only O'Leary's got away very well. Flying Clouds rolled 2,563 and the Man's Shop had to be satisfied with 2,378.

In the commercial series Oregon Bowing Alleys, of Portland, took the lead for outside teams with 2,492. In the same class Salem Sanitary Dairy cracked 2,191 pins; Weinst's Army and Navy Store Salem, 2,163, and Elks' Cubs, of Salem, 2,282.

Bell's Men's Wear, of Bellingham, toppled 2,547 in the open event. William Johnson, young Tacoma commercial trundler, jumped to the front in the singles during the afternoon with 634. Perry and Krus, Portland, were the best in the doubles with 1,126. Krus made 618 in the singles.

A miniature eighteen-hole open-air golf course has been laid out atop a seventeen-story hotel in New York City. The course is open continuously from 9 in the morning until 1 o'clock the following morning. Midnight golf will be featured. Bunkers, sand traps, streams, dog-legs, hills, winding fairways and waterholes are all there.

Hagen to Use All His Team Against British Linksmen

Captain of American Ryder Cup Golfers Says George Duncan Has No Objection to Switching Players After Foursomes—Squad in Spotlight

By WALTER HAGEN
British Open Golf Champion and Captain of U.S. Ryder Cup Team
Written Exclusively for The Colonist and the North American Newspaper Alliance.
(Copyright, 1929, by the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

LONDON, April 20.—George Duncan, captain of the British Ryder cup team, says he has no objection to the United States playing as many men as it likes in the cup matches, provided only eight are put in on any one day. I had been afraid the British might insist that the eight who started the foursomes would have to complete the match. This would have prevented some of our men from getting into the international.

WALTER HAGEN

Now I'll use them all, two who play in the foursomes dropping out, so that the players who remain on the sidelines during the foursomes will play in the singles. The make-up of the U.S. team for the singles will not be determined until next Wednesday, but I certainly will use Johnnie Farrell, Gene Sarazen, Leo Diegel, Horton Smith and myself, and for the others I'll select those who appear to be playing best at the moment.

Duncan is emphatic that the British are not in favor of having the United States represented in these events by others than American homebreds, such as the present United States team consists of. He says that players born in Britain and now living in the United States are not available for British use, so he does not believe they should be selected by America.

This is a delicate subject. I have always maintained that foreign-born professionals who become United States citizens should be included in future teams, if their golf warrants.

CRITICS PASS OPINIONS

Today we returned to London, but for the last few days we have been on the Royal St. George links at Sandwich. There we Americans walloped golf balls about for the first time since we left the United States, and British critics who watched us agreed we had a formidable team.

We spent a lot of time hitting shots over the practice field, for the most part using new hickory-shafted drivers and brassies which we will have to play in competition here, as steel shafts are barred.

Tomorrow morning we motor to Leeds. Larry Fisher, of Detroit, is providing cars for the boys, and this enables us to view the countryside to good advantage.

I wanted the team to visit Kent because I believe Kent has three courses which provide a true test of golf, and that after playing those we will find the inland course at Moortown, where the Ryder cup matches will be contested, easy. And the dunes and winds of Kent offer conditions such as we will encounter in the British open at Muirfield.

PHOTOGRAPHERS ON JOB

While we were at Sandwich Samuel Ryder gave a luncheon to both British and American teams. We have been photographed continually since our arrival in England, and the boys are much in the spotlight. The newspapers are full of stories about us.

I learn that Horton Smith, our "baby," as the British press refers to him, has North American Indian blood in his veins. Some of the London writers dug this interesting information out of him, and are making much of it. They are calling Horton the "original American."

BOWLING LEAGUE SELECTS OFFICERS

W. Baker Elected President of Capital City and District Carpet Bowling League for Ensuing Year

W. Baker, popular member, will guide the destinies of the Capital City and District Carpet Bowling League for the ensuing year. He was unanimously elected president of the organization at the annual meeting held recently. Baker succeeds W. P. Hislop, the retiring president.

The following officers were elected: W. Baker, president; R. Savage, vice-president; R. Gibson, honorary treasurer; W. B. Colvin, honorary secretady; and W. F. Bridges, honorary assistant secretary.

Several amendments to the constitution were made in regard to the number of teams in the First Division of the league. The first put through was to increase the number of teams in the first division by two, and the second to provide room for the four leading teams in the second division to move up in the first group and four lowest squads in the first division to drop to the second division.

"DUSTY" MILLER TO LEAVE TODAY FOR CALIFORNIA

"Dusty" Miller, accompanied by F. B. Richardson, will leave this morning for Vallejo, Cal., where the former is billed to fight Trenkle in a ten-round mix on Thursday. Trenkle, who has wins over Joe Lohman and Joe Woods, is rated as one of the best light-heavies on the Coast. The coming battle appears to be one of the toughest that Miller has signed to fight for many a day.

Should the local glove thrower make a good showing in his bout in the California city, there is a likelihood that Trenkle will come here on May 18.

Red Birds and Crescents Win Island Hoop Honors

Ladies' Aggregation Defeats Ladysmith Felixes, 40-13, in One-Sided Game—Crescents Down Ladysmith Men, 22-18

Local cage teams wrote "finis" on the 1928-29 season at the Y.M.C.A. last night in regal style by copping two Vancouver Island championships trophies. The Red Birds defeated Ladysmith Felixes 40-13, and by doing so won the Wenger Cup, emblematic of the Island title, while the Crescents added another piece of silverware to their already lengthy collection, when they defeated Ladysmith 22-18 in a hard-checking and keenly-contested battle. The George Winter Cup, symbolic of the Island honors, will rest in the Crescents' showcase for one year as the result of their victory.

In the final of the men's city knockout series, C.P.S. defeated Keating 35 to 24.

CRESCENTS WIN

Fifteen points by L. Jones, clever forward of the Crescents, tells the story of his steammates, 22-18 victory over Ladysmith, in a few words. Jones dropped the leather home from all angles, and was the outstanding player on the local line-up.

O. Kulai, husky centre for the visitors, was the classiest player on the floor and his ten points aided greatly in the total of eighteen recorded by his team.

Crescents were on the right end of an 11-9 score at the rest period and as the game progressed, increased it to six points. However, the Up-Islanders put up a great fight near the finish and for a while looked as if they might overtake the locals.

Kelly, of Nanaimo, refereed, and the teams were:

Crescents—L. Jones (15), Spence, Lowe (4), McConnell (2), Temple (11) and Thorpe.

Ladysmith—Strang (5), Davidson (2), Tassen, G. Kulai (10), D. Kulai, Inkster and Mason (1).

RED BIRDS WIN

Victoria Red Birds more thao tripled the score of the Ladysmith Felixes for the ladies' championship of Vancouver Island in the knockout series. Outclassing the visitors in every angle of the game, the locals held a 20-8 adventage at the half-way mark. In the second half the Birds netted the leather for an additional twenty points, whereas the visitors registered seven.

Bertha Peden, sharpshooting forward of the local hoopsters, led the scoring parade with eighteen points. P Kulai was high scorer for the Felixes with seven points.

Referee Tommy Forbes had a busy session handing out personal fouls, and Torrie Rennie, of the Birds, retired early in the last quarter on four personals.

The teams and individual scores follow:

Victoria Red Birds—T. Rennie (4), B. Peden (18), J. Edwards (8), A. Dean (6), D. Rendall (2), D. Lea (2) and B. Boyce (2).

Ladysmith Felixes—L. Micheaux, E. Parking (1), P. Kulai (7), A. Perrina, M. Giavando (3), N. Jackson and O. Wilkinson.

KEATING GOES UNDER

Experience was the telling factor in the final game for the city knockout championship, when C.P.S. humbled Keeting, 35-24, in a fast, hard-checking battle.

"Stew" Skillings, centre for the lumbermen, was the leading light with twenty-one points. Ray Kersey and F. Sutton, with nine points apiece, led the scorers for the losers. C.P.S. held a five-point advantage at half-time, when the score board read C.P.S. 20, Keating 15. Kelly refereed, and the teams were

C.P.S.—McEachern (10), Dowds (2), Skillings (21), Butler (1), Davis (1), Woolridge and Faberberg.

Keating—Michell (6), Sutton (8), Kersey (8), Atkinson, Styan, Cunningham and Bates.

Following the two Island championship games the trophies were presented by Mr. Murdoch.

English Cricket Eleven Welcomed On Return Home

LONDON, April 20.—The English cricket team which has just concluded a triumphant tour of Australia returned home today. The players, with the exception of A. P. F. Chapman, the captain, and D. Y. Jardine, who will return by other routes, were given a civic reception at Dover. A tremendous crowd cheered the players at Victoria railway station on the arrival of the boat train.

STANFORD TRACK ATHLETES EASILY BEAT CALIFORNIA

STANFORD STADIUM, PALO ALTO, Calif., April 20.—Racing to one-sided victories in most of the track events and dominating the field trials in ironclad fashion, Stanford Cardinals smashed their way today to the greatest track and field victory in thirty-six years of competition with the University of California Bears, their oldest athletic rivals.

The score of 94 2-3 to 36 1-3, wiped out in one impressive stroke the former "big meet" record set by California in 1893. National intercollegiate champions for the past two years, the Cardinals completed their duel coast conference competition today with a gesture that indicates they will be almost a certainty to romp off with the third successive title.

MRS. MACFARLANE WINS NEW YEAR VASE AT UPLANDS

Mrs. Macfarlane won the New Year Vase competition for Uplands ladies' "B" players. Mrs. J. A. Cameron was runner-up.

British Stars Will Compete for U.S. Golf Championship

NEW YORK, April 20.—Cyril J. H. Tolley, long-driving British amateur champion, and Eustace F. Storey, member of last year's British Walker Cup team, will compete in the United States amateur golf championship at Pebble Beach, Cal., in September.

The entries of the two British stars were received today. They have booked passage on the Majestic, sailing from England August 14.

TWO ROAD RACES CARDED MAY 25

Pro Patria Branch to Stage Senior and Junior Event in Connection With Celebrations

Two road races will be included in the Victoria Day celebration as the result of the co-operation of the Pro Patria Branch of the British Empire Service Legion with the Junior Chamber of Commerce. An eight-mile senior event and a five-mile junior event will be staged under the supervision and promotion of the service club and a large entry is expected. The race will be held on May 25, starting at 3 p.m., and will be open to any amateur runner in British Columbia. Chief John Fry will act as starter and each race will start from the club's headquarters on Courtney Street.

The senior event, which will be over eight miles, will be open to runners over eighteen years. It will start at the Pro Patria Branch headquarters; thence to Quadra Street, along Quadra to East Saanich Road, and return by the same route.

The junior event will be over a five-mile route, starting at the branch's headquarters. From there the competitors will run to Quadra Street, along Quadra to Cloverdale Avenue, and home by the same route.

Chin Position Factor In Improving Game

KEEP CHIN DOWN AND IN UNTIL BALL IS HIT—
A. DEMAREE

By AL DEMAREE
(Former Pitcher, New York Giants)

While watching the "pros" in action during the LaGorce open at Miami Beach recently, the thing that most impressed me was how every player kept his head down and his chin in and back of the ball until the swing was complete.

Walter Hagen in particular impressed me in this respect and possibly herein lies the greatest secret of a correct golf swing.

Grantland Rice recently said to me that he can't understand why the average golfer doesn't improve his game with the passing years.

"There must be something radically wrong with the teaching of golf," said Rice, "when players devote years of conscientious practice to the game and their game remains practically stationary."

This isn't so in baseball, tennis, football, etc. What's the answer?

Keeping the chin back of the ball, wrist action and balance are the great essentials in golf. Very few golfers make use of these principles and are not even in a position to learn them. Keeping the chin back and in is seldom taught in golf. Maybe it is the magic secret that will transform ninety shooters into seventy ones.

BRADSHAW FIGHTS SWEENEY TO DRAW

Duncan Battler Holds His Own With Powell River Artist—"Young" McCoy Defeats Jennings

DUNCAN, April 20.—Jack Sweeney, Powell River, and Charlie Bradshaw, local boxer, fought to a draw in the ten-round main event of tonight's professional fistic show. Sweeney won the fifth and tenth rounds, Bradshaw the seventh and eighth, while the remainder were even. They fought at 138 pounds.

In the four-round semi-wind-up, Jumbo Davies, Victoria, and Billie Petrie, Nanaimo, battled to a draw. Each weighed 118 pounds.

"Young" McCoy, Victoria, decisively outpointed Billy Jennings, also of Victoria, in a four-round slugging bee at 140 pounds.

Tim Keist, Victoria, and Dick White, Nanaimo, went a four-round exhibition bout. Keist weighed 131 and White 118.

In the curtain raiser of three rounds, Charlie Stock, local glove thrower, and Silly Lewis, of Victoria, failed to decide which was the better boxer. They weighed 100 pounds.

Johnny Morgan, Ladysmith, refereed all bouts.

Strolling along the quays of New York harbor, an Irishman came across the wooden barricade placed around the enclosure where emigrants suspected of suffering from contagious diseases are isolated.

"Phwat's this boarding for?" he inquired of a bystander.

"Oh," was the reply, "that's to keep out fever and things like that, you know."

"Indade!" said Pat, "oi've often heard of the Board of Health, but, bejabbers, it's the first time oi've seen it!"

For nearly five minutes there had been shouts from behind the closed door of a Capetown manager's office. The visitor was tired of it.

"What's all the noise about?" he asked the clerk.

"Mr Brown is speaking to Worcester, sir."

"Well, why on earth can't he use the telephone?"

MRS. JACKSON WINS MEDAL AT UPLANDS

Captures Qualifying Round of Club Championship With Fine Card—Mrs. Wilding Has Best Score

DEFENDING CHAMP FINISHES THIRD

who won the qualifying round of the Uplands ladies' club championship yesterday, when she toured the course in a splendid 90. Mrs. Jackson played fine golf in capturing the honors, despite the unfavorable conditions. She led the field by four strokes.

Mrs. Jackson, the club's longest lady driver, won the medal honors in the qualifying round of the Uplands ladies' golf championship yesterday, when she checked in with a smart 90 for the eighteen holes. She was followed by Mrs. Wilding, a former champion, with 94, and the defending champion, Mrs. Cecil Eve, with 99. The three leaders were the only ones to break the hundred mark. Conditions yesterday were not helpful to low scoring. A heavy wind swept the course throughout the day, and many players found difficulty in controlling the ball. Scores of 118 made the select group.

Competitors are asked to complete their matches as soon as possible, as finals must be played on Saturday, May 18. The defeated eight of the championship group will form the first flight. Results follow:

QUALIFYING ROUND

Mrs. Jackson	90
Mrs. Wilding	94
Mrs. Eve	99
Mrs. Tanner	100
Mrs. Macfarlane	105
Mrs. Ellis	110

TWO ILLUSTRATED ADDRESSES TO BE GIVEN BY ARTISTS

A meeting of the Arts and Crafts Society is arranged for Wednesday evening at 8.15 o'clock, when the speaker for the evening will be Mr. J. S. McMillan, the subject being "Symbolism in Ornamental Art," illustrated with lantern slide examples of many of the ornamental symbols used by various peoples since very early times. Another series of lantern slides depicting Roman life, taken from paintings by well-known artists will also be shown by Mr. D. S. Cameron. The committee extends an invitation to those who are interested in ornament, design and posters, and pictorial art, to this meeting, also to the students attending art classes in the public and private schools. Admission is free.

An enthusiastic fisherman was telling some friends about a proposed fishing trip to Scotland.

"Tons!"

"Will they bite easily?"

"Will they? Why, they're absolutely vicious. A man has to hide behind a tree to bait a hook."

BOWLERS TO MEET

An important meeting of the bowlers dance committee will be held at the Ford National offices, Yates Street, tomorrow at 8 o'clock. Any bowlers interested are extended an invitation to attend.

LIEUT. D. FYVIE AGAIN IN FRONT

16th Canadian Scottish Marksman Turns In Best Score at Heals Meet—Conditions Difficult

The weekly shoot of the Victoria and District Rifle Association took place yesterday afternoon at Heals Range. There was a large turnout, notwithstanding the unsettled weather conditions. At the beginning of the shoot at 200 yards the marksmen were troubled with a changing light which made visibility very uncertain. At 500 and 600 yards the conditions were nearly the same, with the addition of a very tricky wind, which the "old-timers" claimed was the hardest condition to beat in some time, but, nevertheless, there were some good scores turned in. Lieut. Fyvie, for the second time in succession, led the field with a score of 98 and the next dozen scores were well bunched. There were a number of marksmen shooting with open sights and their scores were very creditable. Following are the scores.

BENNY WENDALL IS WILLING TO COME AND FIGHT JUDSON

Word was received from Bellingham last night that Benny Wendall is prepared to meet Eddie Judson, of Seattle, here next Saturday in the ten-round main event of the Central Boxing Club's programme, which will be staged at the Tillicum gymnasium. Wendall is one of the classiest pugs that has ever appeared in a local ring, and on his last trip here was given the call over Jimmie Beck, Tacoma, after six fast rounds. Judson is reported as having won the decision over Beck also.

Ace Hudkins Gunning for Scalps of Three Champs

Nebraskan Declares He Can Beat Dundee, Walker and Loughran—Wildcat Admits He's Good in Interview

Ace Hudkis, the Nebraska wildcat, will have a great year in Queensberry if only a portion if his hopes are realized, says Ed. Hughes, who interviewed him a few days ago at San Francisco.

"Win a title? Sure, I'm bound to," exclaimed the Ace, "and I'll win three of them if they gimme the chance. This is my big year. I'm gonna get one title anyway. That's the surest thing in the world. Wait an' see!"

The Cat was loafing about his suit in the Hotel Harding, taking things easy after his brilliant victory over Rene De Vos. He was in high spirits, full of talk and not at all unwilling to tell what a great fighter he is.

CAN LICK THREE

"Right now I can lick the champion in any one of three divisions, and I'll do it if I get the chance," boomed the Nebraska yellow-head. Ace went on to explain that these unfortunates were Joe Dundee, king of the welters; Mickey Walker, middleweight ruler, and Tommy Loughran, the light heavyweight boss.

"Thought you were a middleweight growing into the light heavies," remarked Hughes.

"Not altogether," returned the Ace. "I can made the welterweight limit without any trouble, and I know I can whip Dundee. He ran out on me in Los Angeles. That's one title I'd like to get.

DECLARES WALKER EASY

"Then there's Mickey Walker. I can lick him sure, too. I did it in Chicago. All the newspapers said so, but they gave the decision to Walker. Well, I'd like to get him here in New York, but there doesn't seem to be much chance of that. Walker doesn't want to fight me again, so what can you do about it? He knows I can beat him."

Here Hughes remarked: "Tommy Loughran's got a corking straight left. Think you could get past it?" "Oh, sure!" Ace shot back without hesitation. "Straight lefts never bothered me, and I've met some good ones. Loughran would be easy for me," continued this man of sublime confidence. "I think I'd give him even a worse beating than I did De Vos.

NOTHING TO LOUGHRAN

"Loughran might make me look bad for a few rounds, but once I got the hang of him, there'd be nothing to it. I'd crowd him so fast he'd never have a chance to show his fancy stuff. He's not rough and tough enough for the likes of me, and he can't punch. Loughran is made to order for me.

"It's my confidence as much as anything," declared the Cat. "I think I've got more of that than any fighter in the game, and I don't mind saying it. Tell you the truth, I'm not afraid of anyone and I've got the idea I can lick anyone who wants to fight me."

"Not a bad idea to pack around," said Hughes.

NO DOUBT ABOUT IT

"No, it isn't," added the Ace with a grin. "Anyway, that's the way I feel about it, isn't it, Artie?" turning to Artie Rose, an assistant trainer, for confirmation. "You tell him, Artie, about the way I acted just before the De Vos fight." And then Artie went on to relate how cocksure Ace was that he'd give the Belgian a beating, never for a minute giving De Vos a look-in, though the betting was just the other way around.

Ace nodded assent to each detail. He is tremendously proud of his fearlessness, likes to exhibit it and talk about it, like some Norse sea-king of old.

"The confidence is one thing," the Cat pointed out, "but I've some other good points, too," added Ace with a serious mien and quiet yet positive voice. "My legs are great. They never get tired or shaky, no matter how hot the fighting. That's half the thing in fighting—the legs.

I'M A BOXER, TOO

"Then there's my style. Do you know, I'm a much better boxer than people think? Well, I am. I'm first of all a fighter, but I can box all right when I have to. I block a lot of blows, make the other guy miss, and I roll with most of the punches that hit me.

"If you don't think I've got some cleverness, look at my face. See any marks on it?" Here the Cat turned his face about for inspection, and the result was startling. His ears are practically unmarked, and far from being "cauliflowered." He has a gold tooth in front, but Ace explained that was the result of a fall from a bicycle. The nose, which is a bit flattened, had been battered so in a football game, according to Ace. The only ring marks on this remarkable slugger are a slight lumpiness about the eyes. This is the familiar imprint of the ring that every boxer inherits after a few hard battles.

JUST TOO SMART

"I'm a fighter, but I've got a boxer's head," went on Ace in his modest way. "For instance, I outsmarted as well as outfought De Vos. I mix my slugging with boxing, and that's where I fooled De Vos. When he expected me to slug, I'd up and box, jab him all over. And then when he figured I was about to box I'd suddenly rip in and whale away for all I was worth. He didn't know how or when to fight me, and that's the truth.

The Ace admitted he made no special attempt at one-punch knockouts. "My style is to throw as many punches as I can, to wear the other fellow down. I've got a body attack worked out that is the best in the business. I keep on top of my man all the time, never giving him a chance to do anything but slug. That's the way I work.

"Not many can stand the beatings I give them and be the same," reflected Ace grimly. "Take Joe Anderson, for example. They gave him the decision to our fight on the Coast, but it was a terrible verdict. Anyhow, I broke three of Anderson's ribs and cut him up badly about the face. He had to go to a hospital afterward. And a little while later he got knocked out by Tuffy Griffiths. I 'softened him up.' That's why Griffiths knocked him out."

OREGON BISHOP AT CATHEDRAL

St. George's Society Will Attend Evening Service—Dean Will Lecture on Mysticism Monday

DEAN QUAINTON TO PREACH TONIGHT

The Right Reverend William P. Remington, Bishop of Eastern Oregon, will preach in the morning, and the Dean of Columbia in the evening. The members of the local branch of the Royal Society of St. George will attend the evening service.

There will celebrations of Holy Communion in Christ Church Cathedral today at 6 and 8 o'clock and after matins; matins and sermon at 11; children's service at 3 p.m., and evensong and sermon at 7.30 o'clock.

The Dean will lecture on "Some Elements of Mysticism" at 8 o'clock on Monday evening in the Memorial Hall. There will be no charge for admission, but during the evening a collection will be taken for the funds of the Men's Parish Guild. The Dean's tutorial class will meet on Wednesday, April 24, at 8 o'clock.

GOD'S GOODNESS TO BE THEME AT UNITY CENTRE

At the Unity Centre, at 11 o'clock today, there will be the usual service. Mr. Harold Pratt will speak on "The Christ spirit working in man, blessing him and bringing him joy." The Sunday school will sing its voluntary, and Mrs. Crawford will preside at the piano. In the evening, at 7:30 o'clock, Mrs. Gordon Grant will speak on "The abundance of God's good gifts." Miss Bonshor will be the accompanist.

Four Questions To Be Answered At Centennial

"Why did Jesus Christ leave this earth if it is necessary for Him to be here in physical form?" This question, along with another, "Will He come again in the flesh?" will be the subjects for discussion in Centennial United Church, Gorge Road, this morning by the pastor, Rev. J. P. Westman. The pastor will be pleased to meet any interested ones at the close of the service and answer questions relating to the subject.

In the evening the subject will be in the form of two questions, namely, "What is meant by an educated man?" and "Can an intelligent man be a Christian these days?"

The Sunday school will meet in all departments at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

NEIGHBORS TO EXCHANGE

Rev. J. Strachan to Speak at First United Church—Rev. J. G. G. Bompas Near End of Pastorate

NEW MEMBERS TO MEET WEDNESDAY

Rev. James Strachan and Rev. Dr. Wilson are exchanging pulpits for the morning service today. Rev. Mr. Strachan will have for his subject in First United Church, "Of What Can One Be Sure?" He will deal with the question of finality in religion.

In the evening Rev. J. G. G. Bompas will preach. His subject will be "Covenant Making." Whether in the light of modern education and changing conditions a man should ever make a hard-and-fast pledge will be discussed in a helpful way by Mr. Bompas. The choir will have special music at both services.

On Wednesday evening the annual reception for those who have connected themselves with the church during the past year will be held. As Mr. and Mrs. Bompas are to leave shortly, this will offer an opportunity for the congregation to say farewell to them prior to their going back to China.

DR. A. F. BARTON TO TALK ABOUT DAWN OF NEW DAY

Today at the Progressive Thought Temple Dr. A. F. Barton will speak at both services. At 11 o'clock he will speak on "Miracles," and in the evening at 7:30 his subject will be "The World's New Dawn." Mr. G. Gray, the well-known singer, will be the soloist at the evening service. At the midweek meeting Dr. Barton will give another of his popular health lectures, the subject of which will be "The Humao Factory: A Great Discovery." At this meeting Dr. Barton has announced that copies of the beautiful chart on the human factory may be had on application.

WINNERS TO SING FESTIVAL TEST

Emmanuel Church Choir Will Render Challenge Shield Number at Evening Service

"A Perverted Gospel" will be the subject of the sermon by Rev. Henry Knox, at Emmanuel Baptist Church this evening. The message will deal with a cause of rapidly increasing religious sects, of pronounced differences in belief and of divisions within the Christian Church. At this service the choir which was successful in winning the Kiwanis Club Challenge Shield, in the Festival competition for intermediate church choirs and choral societies, will sing one of the test pieces, "Thou Must Leave Thy Lovely Dwelling" (Hector Berlioz), and also "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem" (Maunder).

At the morning hour of worship the choir will sing "I Am Alpha and Omega" (Stainer). The sermon by Rev. Henry Knox will be on the subject, "God, Our Helper."

During the Sunday school session, which begins at 9.45 o'clock, successful competitors in the Dominion-wide temperance essay contest, arranged by The Montreal Witness, will be presented with their prizes.

SAINT'S DAY TO BE OBSERVED

St. Mark's Rector Will Preach on the Second Gospeller—Holy Communion Also on Thursday

There will be a service of Holy Communion at St. Mark's Church, Cloverdale, today at 8 o'clock; Holy Communion and sermon at 11, and Evensong at 7 o'clock. Rev. O. L. Jull, vicar of the parish, will take for his subject at the morning service: "Holding On to Faith," and at Evensong will preach on St. Mark. On Thursday, St. Mark's Day, there will be a celebration of Holy Communion at 10 o'clock.

GRACE LUTHERAN MEN WILL MEET

The usual services will be held at the Grace Lutherao Church today at 11 and 7.30 o'clock. At the morning service the pastor, Rev. Theo. A. Jansen, will speak on the subject: "Getting the Most Out of Life," using as a text John xvi, 16-24. There will be a solo by Mr. J. J. Matheson. The subject for the evening service will be "Clinching a Bargain." This will be the third address in a series on the appearances of the risen Christ. A meeting of the Brotherhood will be held in the social rooms of the church on Monday evening.

First Spiritual People to Review Previous Lectures

Madame Sherry's subject for this evening will be "Questions and Answers" on some of the past lectures. This should prove to be very interesting as well as educational. Bring a question and a friend to the First Spiritual Church, Harmony Hall, 724 Fort Street. Service at 7:30 o'clock.

Langford Service

Service today in St. Matthew's Church, Langford, will be at 7 o'clock.

The pastor of Fairfield United Church, Rev. Hugh Nixon, will preach morning and evening, taking for his subject at 11 o'clock, "Three Great Temptations," and in the evening "The Deceptions and Duties of Wealth." The music for the morning service will be an anthem by the choir and in the evening a solo by Mrs Lievre and an anthem by the choir.

WHAT LIBERTY IS FEASIBLE?

Dr. Clem Davies Will Discuss Limitations Laid on Youth in Modern Life

FINE VOCALISTS TO SING TONIGHT

"Liberty: A Restatement for This Generation," will be the theme of Rev. Dr. Clem Davies at the Victoria City Temple this evening, the services for the day being held in the usual edifice, namely, the Royal Victoria Theatre. Dr. Davies will outline for youth what limitations they must suffer in order to make life happy for themselves and others.

Dr. Davies' morning theme is "A Question Which Answers Itself." The music for the morning service will comprise an anthem by Himmel, "Incline Thine Ear"; the evening anthem arranged by Woodward being "The Radiant Morn Has Passed Away." Rheta Ormiston McNeill, of Victoria, and Mary Lade, vocalist of Chown Church Choir, Vancouver, will be the Sunday evening soloists, with music by Temple choir and orchestra.

BRING CHILDREN TO CHURCH TO BE PASTOR'S COUNSEL

The services in Victoria United Church will be conducted by the pastor, Rev. H. J. Armitage, B.D., who will preach at the morning worship on "The Value of the Family Pew," or "The Child in the Congregation." The pastor will give also a five-minute address to the young people. The junior choir will render an anthem. Sunday school at 2:30 p.m.

At the evening service the sermon will deal with "The Wonderful Achievements of Jesus With Humanity." The choir will sing special music and a cordial welcome is given to all. On Wednesday evening the midweek service will be held, when the pastor will speak on "The Living Message of the Book of Habakkuk."

ST. MARY'S WILL MEET LATER HOUR

Evening Service at Oak Bay Church to Begin at 7:30 O'Clock—Rector Will Preach Twice Today

There will be a celebration of Holy Communion in St. Mary's at 8 o'clock, Matins and sermon at 11, and Evensong and sermon at 7:30. The rector will preach at both services. Members of the congregation are asked to note that the hour of the Evensong service is changed to 7 30.

The girls' Bible class meets in the vestry at 9 45 o'clock. The senior classes of the Sunday school meet in St Mary's Hall at 9.45, the junior classes at 11 o'clock.

SIDNEY RECTOR IS PREACHER AT ST. SAVIOUR'S TONIGHT

Services at St. Saviour's Church today will be as follows: At 11 o'clock a celebration of Holy Communion with sermon; the rector, Rev. Edwin Moss, will preach. Evensong at 7 o'clock; Rev. T. M. Hughes, rector of Sidney, will take charge and preach. The Sunday school, with Mr. George Loftus as superintendent, is steadily increasing in numbers and the regularity of the pupils in attendance is sustained. The Sunday school will meet as usual at 10 o'clock.

SICK, NEEDY AND BABIES CARED FOR BY ARMY PEOPLE

Adjutant and Mrs. Merrett will lead the meetings today at the Salvation Army Citadel, Broad Street. Knee drill will be held at 7 o'clock, holiness meeting at 11, praise meeting at 3.15, and a salvation meeting at 7:15 o'clock. "Has Christianity Failed?" will be the subject of Adjutant Merrett's address at the evening meeting.

Sunday school is held in the citadel at 2 o'clock, and there is always a welcome for children not attending elsewhere. Sand tray classes keep the little tots interested in the Bible lesson, and they are received from the age of four years. Those younger are under the care of the cradle roll sergeant, Mrs. E. Ealing, who visits the mothers and babies in their homes. She will be pleased to call on any who telephone 3118Y.

Arrangements have been made for the visitation of the sick and shut-in, and a telephone call to 821L or 1142R will insure a visit from a Salvationist in the district. The members of the League of Mercy, who visit some of the city institutions, desire to thank all who assisted them at their monthly public meeting on Thursday night. The proceeds will be used in their work among the sick and sorrowing.

KNOX THEMES WAR AND PEACE

"The Fiasco of War" (Matt. xxvi, 52) will be the theme of the sermon at 11 o'clock today at Knox Presbyterian Church, corner of Gladstone and Stanley Avenues. The subject of the evening's address at 7.30 o'clock will be "A Peace Creed" (Col. iii, 11) Rev T. Hafren Davies, M.A., will conduct both services. The Sunday school will meet as usual at 9 45 o'clock.

"Atonement" to Be Christian Science Subject Today

All churches and societies of Christ, Scientist, branches of the Mother Church, the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., will have the subject of "Doctrine of Atonement" for their lesson-sermon on Sunday, with the following golden text from Ephesians 5:2: "Walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour."

Sunday morning services at First Church of Christ, Scientist, Victoria, are held at 11 o'clock. Evening services are at 7:30 o'clock. Wednesday evening services, which include testimonies of healing, are held at 8 o'clock. A free reading room for the public is maintained in the Sayward Building.

ST. ANDREW'S TOPIC IS OMNISCIENCE

At St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Douglas and Broughton Street, the minister, Rev. H. P. S. Luttrell, B.A., will preach at both services today. In the morning Mr. Luttrell will take as his theme, "What God Sees," based on Proverbs xv, 3, and will discuss the omniscience of God. In the evening, referring to 1 Corinthians, iv, 27, Mr. Luttrell will answer the query, "What Is a Castaway?" and will seek to show that it is through self-denial and self-control that one reaches true self-expression, and avoids the peril of being cast away as a useless failure.

MESSAGE FROM THE MOUNTAIN

RECTOR OF ST. JOHN'S WILL SPEAK ABOUT GREAT COMMISSION

Story of Balaam Evening Topic of Rev. F. A. P. Chadwick—Change Time for Summer Sunday School

Rev. F. A. P. Chadwick will continue the Eastertide series of sermons at St. John's Church this evening, dealing with the theme of the various appearances of Jesus Christ after his resurrection. The special subject for this Sunday will be "The Mountain in Galilee," which was the occasion when Christ appeared before a large concourse of His disciples and gave the great commission to His Church.

The Old Testament Scripture lesson for the day will supply the theme for the sermon in the morning, when the rector will preach on "Balaam's Prophecy Concerning Israel."

The services for the day will consist of Holy Communion at 8 o'clock: morning prayer at 11, and evensong at 7:30. An organ recital will be rendered by Mr. G. Jennings Burnett before the evening service, commencing at 7:10 o'clock.

The Sunday school will meet during the Summer months at 10·45 o'clock, and after attending the church service, the classes will be resumed in the schoolroom. The Anglican Young People's Bible Class will be held at 10 o'clock in the Guildroom.

THEME IS SEEING THINGS CLOSE IN

Rev. W. A. Guy to Discuss Spiritual Element of Civilization—Talk to Children on Heirlooms

The minister, Rev. W. A. Guy, will be in charge of both services today at Oak Bay United Church. The sermonette for the junior section of the congregation will have as its topic the value of heirlooms. The sermon will discuss "Near-at-Hand Discoveries; or, An Eye for the Essential Things."

At the evening service the minister will analyse civilization from the standpoint of its spiritual content, and will ask whether Christianity can bring to world life a truly rational spirit and outlook.

The Wednesday night hour for the next quarter will be devoted to the "Life of Lives, a Detailed Study," Lesson 1, Jesus' rule of conduct.

PASTOR TO CLOSE LECTURE COURSE

"The Memorials of the New Covenant" will be the subject of Pastor N. C. Erntson in his Sunday night lecture at St. David's Hall, 1414 Douglas Street. Mr Erntson states that he has been very much pleased with the interest manifested in his lectures during the Winter months. Next Sunday night will be his closing lecture, and he announces as his subject: "Seven Reasons Why Seventh Day Adventists Believe the Lord Is Coming Soon." The public is urged to attend these closing lectures. There is no charge for admission.

BRITISH-ISRAEL TOPIC FOR MONDAY

Mr. W. H. Blackaller will continue his lectures, his subject this week to be, "Indisputable Evidence of God's Choice of the Saac-son Race." It will be given in the Board of Trade Building, 821 Bastion Street, Monday, April 22, at 8 o'clock.

Theosophical Society

"Occult Adeptship" will be the subject presented and discussed tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock at a public meeting of the Victoria Independent Theosophical Society in the rooms of the society, Jones Building, Fort Street. The public is invited to join in the discussion.

Church Follows Native Methods in Spreading Christianity in India

Music, Ashrams and Sadhuism of India Being Adopted by Missionaries—Drama Given More Prominence in Presenting Biblical Truth—Royalty Takes Miner's Post

Signs Noted Showing Anglican and Eastern Churches Drawing Together

THE adoption by Christians of indigenous Indian methods that have from time immemorial been used in the religious life of India, is one of the newer phases of missionary activity in that country. These are mainly the use of music and the recital of sacred poetry, the order of sadhus or itinerant mendicant preachers, and the ashram or devotional centre. These methods are at present in an experimental stage, according to Mr. Ooman Philip, who is secretary of the Indian Christian Council of India, Burma and Ceylon, but they indicate the lines of probable development in the future.

Music has played a most important part in fostering the devotional life and in propagating religious truth in India, yet because it was strangely different from Western music and closely connected with the worship of Hindu gods, its use was discouraged by the early missionaries. Instead of adopting Indian music, hymns in common use in the West were translated into the vernacular and converts were taught to sing them to English, German or Welsh tunes, according to the country or origin of the mission concerned. "It is not uncommon," says Mr. Philip, "to come across Christian congregations in India, even in rural areas, who will sing devoutly atrocious vernacular translations of Western hymns, but will consider it unorthodox to use any Indian tune at the time of divine worship.

The recital of sacred poetry to the accompaniment of Indian musical instruments and drums, and interspersed with short explanatory speeches, is now being followed by trained Christian evangelists in the Tamil, Telegu, Marathi and Hindi languages.

The poetic work of some few talented converts, such as Tilak in the Marathi language, is gradually producing a vernacular Christian hymnology. This tendency is in harmony with the finding of the Jerusal Council, which affirmed that "the interpretation of Christ and its expression in worship and service, in customs, art and architecture should incorporate the worthy characteristics of the people, while conserving at the same time the heritage of the church in all lands and in all ages."

As to the ashram, it had stood in Hinduism for the practice of passive contemplation or self-centred austerities, but under the influence of Christianity it has become in reformed Hinduism a group of like-minded people living together in spiritual fellowship and engaging in practical service or both. Mr. Philips instances Rabindranath Tagore and Mahatma Gandhi as being at the centre of the new type of ashram in Hindu life which is devoted to service. The ashram method of service has also been taken over by Christians. An illustration is that of Tirupattur in South India, where two qualified medical men, one an Indian and the other a Scot, established a home where not only the sick are cared for but where a central place is given to prayer. It is called the Krustu-Kula-Ashram (home of the family of Christ) and to it men come for a period of spiritual fellowship and voluntary service.

Noting that while in 1921 there were only ten Christian sadhus, or itinerant preachers, there are now fifty or sixty, Mr. Philips gives as the finest example of this type of gospeller, Sadhu Sundar Singh, who will not, however, permit himself to be made the head of a movement.

As illustrating the increasing use of religious drama, the Portland, Maine, Federation of Church put on during Holy Week a series of brief Biblical dramas which were rendered by a New York artist. In Boston, for the twenty-seventh Lenten season, a Roman Catholic priest staged twenty-four performances of "Pilate's Daughter," the cast being composed of young women from his parish. Similar to this is the presentation in a village not far from Montreal now for several Summers a sort of Canadian Oberammergau. This is to be noted in the Protestant churches in Canada an increase in the presentation of tableaux, and other dramatic representations of Biblical subjects.

The withdrawal by the Archbishop of Canterbury of his proposed trip to the Holy Land calls attention to the closer intercourse in later years of the Anglican and Eastern churches. Under the regime of Dr Randall T. Davidson, the late Canterbury head, reciprocity was arranged between the Church of England and one or two branches of the Eastern churches in the matter of the standing of ordained clergymen. The recent yearly Anglo-Catholic pilgrimages to Egypt and Jerusalem have been cordially received by the Eastern orthodox prelates there. At various times Greek priests have participated in Anglican services and have conducted worship according to their ritual in one part of Anglican cathedrals. It is expected that the relationship of these two sections of the church will be one of the major matters of discussion at the Lambeth Conference in 1930. At a recent luncheon given to a bishop of the Old Catholic Church, the Greek Archbishop of Thyatira suggested an early meeting of representatives of the three communions to be convened by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Duke of York will hold a post next month that was held five years ago by a Scottish miner, that of Lord High Commissioner of the King to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. It was in 1924 that "Jamie" Brown had the honors of Holyrood Palace. This year will be the last assembly of the Church of Scotland before entering union.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones, who sailed a few days ago for England en route to India, stated in Chicago that "something has been slipping in the home church, and that something is Christ." Regarding India, he quoted its vision of the need of the world—an intelligent Indian leader as saying that "Jesus Christ is the only one who is seriously bidding for the heart of India."

ENGLISH SEA POWER DATES ITS BEGINNING TO ELIZABETHAN AGE

Drake's Wonderful Voyage Round the World, Initiated by Force of Circumstances in Pacific, Brought Him Close to Shores of British Columbia in Sixteenth Century

How Seamen of That Age Laid Foundation of Maritime Skill

THE extraordinary position held by England as "Master of the Seas" is an epic which is worthy of a Milton to record. Up to the defeat of the Spanish Armada the sovereignty of the sea belonged to Spain. It was King Henry VIII who first visualized the possibilities which belong to England and who made the first bid for sea power. First he turned his attention to the English Channel, which formed the natural defence of the realm. The opening of the Atlantic revolutionized war and seamanship. Henry was the first prince who saw the value and use of gunpowder. He fortified the coast of England. He selected William Hawkins, of Plymouth, and Fletcher, of Rye, to take in hand the building of a new type of vessel, with sails trimmed fore and aft, which would ride the seas to the windward—small vessels, which one day would smash the mighty power of Spain. To his enemies he said, "You threaten me that you will use the wealth our fathers gave you to overthrow my government and bring in the invader. I will take your wealth, and I will use it to disappoint your treachery." The work of Henry can be seen along the coast from Berwick to Land's End.

The rise of England from a third rate power to that of the leading nation of the world is because of her responsiveness to the light of the reformation. English ships not only scoured the seven seas in search of Spanish ships laden with gold, but her vessels were the ambassadors of liberty and democracy. It was English ships and English seamen which made possible the distribution in England of the Bible, printed at Worms and Geneva from the matchless translation of Tyndale, an exile from his native land. English seamen literally bootlegged the Bible into England, against the decrees of the Bishop of London; and so the work of the reformation spread to the humblest cottage. That there is a League of Nations sitting today at Geneva, we may thank Tyndale and Cranmer, coupled with the work of English seamen who fought the enemies of democracy in every sea, port and harbor of the world. The English navy was the "sea cradle of the reformation."

DRAKE'S VOYAGE

Perhaps the most extraordinary seaman in the annals of English history, and for that matter, in the history of the world, was Sir Francis Drake. Spain sent her sailors across the Panama to build ships for the Pacific. The sea that bore her treasure craft—millions upon millions of pounds sterling in pure gold, silver, emeralds, pearls—was as closed to the rest of the world. Spain kept the key. The sea was shut until Drake came coursing round the world, and his coming was so impossible to the Spanish mind that half the treasure ships scuttled by the English pirate mistook him for a visiting Spaniard, till the rallying cry, "God and Saint George!" wakened them from their dream.

John Hawkins had been cruising the West Indies exchanging slaves for gold. A hurricane broke, and he was obliged to tow his six little ships into port directly under Spanish guns. As he waited for permission to land there sailed into the harbor the Spanish fleet itself, with treasure to the value of one million eight hundred thousand pounds. English and Spanish ships dipped colors to each other, as courtiers might doff their hats; the guns roared a salute. In order to avoid clashes with the seamen, an island was assigned to the English to disembark. It was the 12th of August, 1568. Half the crew had landed, half the cannon had been taken ashore, when Hawkins noticed torches—a thousand torches glistening above the mailed armour of the Spanish soldiers, marching down from the fort and being swiftly transferred to the frigates. A blare of Spanish trumpets blew to arms! Hawkins had just called his page to hand round mugs of beer, when a cannon shot came, which tore the tankard out of his hand.

"God and Saint George," thundered the enraged Englishman "down with the traitorous devils!"

There was no time to save the sailors ashore; no chance to raise anchors! The Spanish frigates were already abreast, and now boarding the English decks, hurling hand grenades into the hatches below where the powder was stored. It was a hand-to-hand slaughter on decks slippery with blood. Hawkins' ship flew into mid-air, a fiery wreck, and then sank, carrying down five hundred Spaniards. Cutlass in hand head over heels went Hawkins into the sea. A rope was flung out to him by a friend, and he climbed up the sides of an English ship. Sails were hoisted, and two of the smallest English vessels went before the wind as if "fiend-chased," and drifted to sea. Not one of the sailors on shore escaped. All were butchered, or worse. The outraged and starving crew made its way back to England, and the news spread far and near, what deeds were done. Only the Minion and Judith came back, and those two vessels had been under the command of young Drake of Devon, a red-haired English boy of twenty-four years of age. Did Drake accept this lesson, or challenge it?

Drake was now in no doubt as to where gold could be got. For two years he prospected for the sources of that golden wealth. He cruised the Spanish main, and from the Indians he learned how Peruvian gold would be transported overland by mule trains. For twelve days, Drake with eighteen English boys lay in wait in the woods of Nombre de Dios. Taken by surprise, the mule train stampeded and left Drake in possession of huge treasure. But Spanish frigates were close at hand in search for Drake, and two hundred horsemen were in hot pursuit. Between the two—was he trapped? —Not he! By prior arrangement, he arranged for his vessels to lay off from shore, and with driftwood collected off the beach, he made a raft, on which he carried his men and valuable convoy to his ships in safety.

THE RETURN TRIUMPHANT

On a Sunday morning, August 9, 1573, the little English ships were once more in his beloved Plymouth. Reports soon spread that Drake, the bold sea-rover, was in port loaded with foreign treasure. Drake was now the richest man in England. Good Queen Bess was as thrilled by this latest adventure as were the youth of English seaports. She received Drake in audience, and presented him with a magnificent sword, with the words, "Who striketh thee, Drake, striketh us!"

After such a successful venture, Drake was now able to provide his own vessels, and in November, 1577, he set sail with five ships, the Pelican, Elizabeth, Swan, Christopher, and Marygold, no larger than fishing schooners; manned in all by one hundred and sixty sailors, mostly boys. After many harrowing experiences, Drake anchored at St. Julian, a harbor of South America. The Christopher had gone adrift; the Swan was broke up as unseaworthy, leaving only the Pelican, the Elizabeth and the Marygold. To rouse his men, he had a solemn service for the crew, and revealed to them his project for a voyage on the Pacific. After painting the glories of a campaign against Spanish ports of the South seas, he wound up an inspiriting address with the assurance that after this voyage "the worst boy aboard would never nede to goe agayne to sea, but be able to lyve in England like a right good gentleman."

Cross tides many times threatened to swamp the little craft. Drake arrived on the west side of the Pacific on September 6, in honor of which the topsails were dipped, psalms of thanks chanted and prayers said. In honor of the first English vessel to enter this ocean Drake renamed his ship Golden Hind. The Golden Hind snapped her cable against the drive of tide and wind. Only the Elizabeth kept her anchor grip. The crew of the Elizabeth became so panic-stricken that when the storm abated they turned back through the straits and steered for home; but only eight of the crew survived after wandering for nine years in Brazil. But onward sailed the Golden Hind with the mighty Drake on board. With battened hatches, he drove southward and south, clear down where the Atlantic and Pacific meet at Cape Horn, now for the first time seen by a British navigator. On October 30 he landed and took possession of "this earth's end" for the Queen. He then headed northward for the forbidden waters of the Pacific bordering New Spain. He landed at Valparaiso, and the Spanish commander of the fleet at anchor in port dipped colors in salute, thinking him a messenger from Spain. Drake returned the salute by a wave of his plumed hat. Remembering their last "salute," the crew of sixty English pirates swarmed across the vessel like hornets; head over heels, down the hatchway reeled the astonished dons. Drake clapped down the hatches and had the Spaniards trapped there while his men went ashore to sack the town. The entire population fled to the hills. Not a drop of blood was shed. Rich plunder was carried off, of pure gold and gems.

TREASURES RECOVERED

At Tarapaca more treasure was taken. When the news first reached the Spanish viceroy, Don Francisco de Toledo, he exclaimed, "What, a pirate heretic in the South Seas! Preposterous!" Drake arrived at Callao, the port of Lima, and found thirty ships lying dismantled. The Governor gathered two thousand soldiers to march with all speed for Callao. Drake this time missed the treasure ship, which had left for Panama. The Golden Hind was lying outside the port, when came pouring in two thousand soldiers. The Spaniards dashed to embark on the rifled ships. Divine Providence had surely given him into their hands, but just as they began rowing might and main, a fresh wind ruffled the water. The Golden Hind spread her wings and was off like a bird! Drake knew that no ship afloat could outsail his swift little craft (thanks to Fletcher, of Rye), and the Spaniards turned back in disgust. His ship was laden with wealth untold. There was no quarrel over the spoil. All the crew shared in the loot. Old muskets and cutlasses were scoured and made ready for action. With sail fully spread they crossed the equator. Thirty cannon were ready for action, and in a loud voice Drake offered the present of his own golden chain to the man who should first descry the sails of a Spanish vessel. They were looking for the Glory of the South Seas, a splendid Spanish galleon laden with treasure. At three in the afternoon of March 1 John Drake, the commander's brother, shouted from the mast top: "Sail ho!" and the blood of every Englishman aboard jumped to the words. At six in the evening, just off Cape Francisco, they were so close to the Glory of the South Seas they could see that she was compelled to sail slowly, owing to the weight of her cargo. Unaware of any danger, her captain thought Drake was some messenger from the viceroy, and instead of getting arms in readiness he lowered canvas, came to anchor and waited. Drake's announcement was a roaring cannonade that blew the mast poles off the Spanish ship, crippling her like a bird with broken wings. A furious fusilade followed, the unscathed English ship riding down on her staggering victim like a bird of prey. The Spanish treasure was bound with grappling hooks and there was a rush over the decks, the flashing of naked swords, with decks swimming in blood. The booty from this conquest was twenty-six tons of pure silver, and precious jewels—emeralds and pearls, to the value of a million dollars.

With such a cargo on board Drake dared not return to England via the Straits of Magellan. All the Spanish frigates of the Pacific were on the watch. The Golden Hind was so heavily laden with treasure that it was actually necessary to lighten ballast by throwing spices and silks overboard. Drake's orchestra played a stirring refrain off Cape Francisco that night.

On June 17 Drake turned south and anchored in a bay now well identified as Drake's Bay, north of San Francisco. The next morning an Indian in a canoe shouted an oration of welcome, blowing feather down on the air as a sign of peace, and finally coming nearer, tossed a rush basket full of tobacco into the Golden Hind. In vain Drake threw out presents to lure the Indian aboard. The Indian refused everything but a gorgeous hat that floated out on the water. By June 21 tents were erected on shore and a rude fortification built. The Indian tribes brought presents and laid down their spears and bows. By the 23rd the Indians were on their knees at the foot of the hill, offering sacrifices to the wonderful beings in the fort. Whatever the English pirate's faults, he deserves credit for treating the Indians with a respect which puts later navigators to shame. Because of resemblance of the white sand cliffs to his native land, he called the region "New Albion." New Albion would be an offset to "New Spain." Drake saw himself a second Cortes, and nailed to a tree a brass plate on which was graven the Queen's name, the year, the free surrender of the country to the Queen, and Drake's own name.

CORSAIR COMES HOME

Following the chart taken from a Spanish ship, Drake steered for the Philippines, thence southward through the East Indies to the Indian Ocean, and back to Plymouth, where he anchored on September 26, 1580. The bells were set ringing. A courier went spurring to London with word that Drake, the corsair, who had turned the Spanish world upside down, had come home. For a week the people of England abandoned themselves to feasting. Ballads rang with the name and fame of Drake. His name was on every tongue. Regardless of diplomatic usage and complaints from Philip of Spain, demands for his arrest and threats of reprisals, on April 4 Queen Elizabeth went in state to dine on the Golden Hind, to the music of those stringed instruments that had harped away Drake's fear of death or devil as he ploughed an English keep round the world. After the banquet she bade him fall on his knees, and with a light touch of the sword gave him the title that was the seal of the court's approval.

Drake died off Porto Bello in his fifty-first year, and they sank his body with honor down into the deep. The fame of Drake is the glory of England. England needed such a man. If the world today is safer for democracy, it is because such men as Drake and Blake, Grenville and Nelson, created the tradition.

The Soldier

IF I should die, think only this of me
That there's some corner of a foreign field
That is for ever England. There shall be
In that rich earth a richer dust concealed;
A dust whom England bore, shaped, made aware,
Gave, once, her flowers to love, her ways to roam,
A body of England's breathing English air,
Washed by the rivers, blest by suns of home.

And think this heart, all evil shed away,
A pulse in the eternal mind, no less
Gives somewhere back the thoughts by England given;
Her sights and sounds; dreams happy as her day;
And laughter, learned of friends; and gentleness,
In hearts of peace, under an English heaven.

—Rupert Brooke.

England, My England

WHAT have I done for you,
England, my England?
What is there I would not do,
England, my own?
With your glorious eyes austere,
As the Lord were walking near,
Whispering terrible things and dear
As the Song on your bugles blown,
England—
Round the world on your bugles blown.

Where shall the watchful sun,
England, my England,
Match the master-work you've done,
England, my own?
When shall he rejoice again
Such a breed of mighty men
As come forward, one to ten,
To the Song on your bugles blown,
England—
Down the years on your bugles blown?

—Henley.

DRAKE'S DRUM

Drake, he's in his hammock an' a thousand mile away
(Capten, art tha sleepin' there below?),
Slung atween the round shot in Nombre Dios Bay,
An' dreamin' arl the time o' Plymouth Hoe.
Yarnder lumes the Island, yarnder lie the ships,
Wi' sailor lads a dancin' heel-an'-toe,
An' the shore lights flashin', an' the night-tide dashin',
He sees et arl so plainly as he saw et long ago.

Drake, he was a Devon man, an' ruled the Devon seas
(Capten, art tha sleepin' there below?),
Rovin' tho' his death fell, he went wi' heart at ease,
An' dreamin' arl the time o' Plymouth Hoe.
"Take my drum to England, hang et by the shore,
Strike et when your powder's runnin' low;
If the Dons sight Devon, I'll quit the port of Heaven,
An' drum them up the Channel as we drummed them long ago."

Drake, he's in his hammock till the great Armadas come
(Capten, art tha sleepin' there below?),
Slung atween the round shot, listenin' for the drum,
An' dreamin' arl the time o' Plymouth Hoe.
Call him on the deep sea, call him up the Sound,
Call him when ye sail to meet the foe;
Where the old trade's plyin' an' the old flag flyin'
They shall find him ware an' wakin', as they found him long ago!

PRINCE OF WALES PAYS HIS TRIBUTE

Speech of the Prince of Wales, chairman and president of the Royal Society of St. George, at the annual banquet in the London Guildhall.

"The word 'England' suggests many different ideas to different kinds of Englishmen. The greater part of our juvenile population, for instance, think England is a portion of the globe that produces, from time to time, eleven good cricketers to play test matches—sometimes to win them—against Australia and South Africa (laughter), and, on the other hand, some of their elders think that it stands for a rather draughty corner of Northwest Europe, which is much favored as a residence by the influenza germ. (Renewed laughter). But the Royal Society of St. George knows better than that. We know what 'England' means. We know what England has been, still is, and, please God, always will be, so long as men continue to use that word. (Loud cheers). There is no better place, and if any of us have to leave it, we are not really happy until we get back again. (Cheers.)

"I have already said that, as a race, we English people do not care much about talking about our own country, and to blow its trumpet is decidedly un-English, but there is one attribute of England rather hard to express. I mean all the associations that are bound up in that essentially English word 'home'. (Applause.) Now, I do not think that anyone can call me a stay-at-home, and nobody—least of all myself—can say that my friends overseas do not make me feel very much at home when I visit them. At the same time, whenever I hear the word 'home', I think of England, just in the same way as all of English descent speak of England, wherever they may happen to have been born. (Applause.)

A Message to St. George

By FRANK R. BENSON

Dear St. George—Why do you not place yourself at the head of the host? Why dost thou not ride off to the great adventure of peace as in the time of war?

We listen for the rhythmic tread of the hoofs; we listen for the clank of the coat of mail; we watch for the flash of the flaming sword. Our ears are strained for the music of chant, of song and laughter. Our knees are bent and faltering, yet we cannot pray. Our feet are light and active, yet we cannot dance, or march, or leap for joy, or wend in stately tread to the Shrine of the Holy One; yet all around is the promise of Spring.

Dost thou think, Oh Leader, that we have not tended the horses and kine, and shepherded the sheep in the hills, and ploughed the acres of Thy Island Home?

Have we let the fires of our factories be damped by the spirit of hate and discord, or of selfish greed; is it that our arms have grown feeble in the wielding of the axe and spade? They were not so with the bayonet and the sword. Is it that our hands have lost their cunning with the hammer and chisel? They were strong to build—gentle yet potent to heal in the years of wounds and agony; is it that we have set up strange altars in our midst to idols of avarice, lust of power and greed; is it that we have planted groves of bramble and of thorn, of nettle and nightshade near Thy Rose Tree, and the Oaks?

The world wondered at the valor and wisdom of Thy warring, wondered and waited for the shaping of the brave new world therein born to men; they have somewhat ceased to wonder, but they are waiting still, hoping that the Empire will take the lead in the remaking of the world for man.

Year by year the call rings out on the birthday of Shakespeare (the singer of our race and humanity), Zebrugge Day, "and Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by, from this day to the ending of the world, but we in it shall be remembered."

The Avon singer voiced our hopes! Surely we shall fulfil? Slowly we are fulfilling; be not wrath! We are gentler than of old—we are striving again to till St. George's Island, and the lands of freedom and of service that stretch so far beyond, a commonwealth of people in whose midst shall be no ugliness or slum, but equal opportunities for all to realise in thought and deed, "St. George for Merrie England," glad beyond all measure in the promise of Spring.

Home Thoughts From Abroad

OH, to be in England
Now that April's there,
And whoever wakes in England
Sees, some morning, unaware,
That the lowest boughs and the brushwood sheaf
Round the elm tree bole are in tiny leaf,
While the chaffinch sings on the orchard bough
In England—now!

And after April, when May follows,
And the whitethroat builds, and all the swallows!
Hark, where my blossomed pear tree in the hedge
Leans to the field and scatters on the clover
Blossoms and dewdrops—at the bent spray's edge—
That's the wise thrush; he sings each song twice over,
Lest you should think he never could recapture
The first fine careless rapture!
And though the fields look rough with hoary dew,
All will be gay when noontide wakes anew
The buttercups, the little children's dower—
Far brighter than this gaudy melon-flower!

—Robert Browning

Mistake Dims Prestige Of St. George's Fair

"Patriotism is more than sentiment; it is a conviction based upon a comprehension of the duties of a citizen, and a determination loyally to perform such duties. Patriotism is love of country, born of familiarity with its history, reverence for its institutions, and faith in its possibilities, and is evidenced by obedience to its law and respect for its flag."—Howard Roff, founder of the Royal Society of St. George.

For the purpose of reviving the observance throughout the Empire of St. George's Day, April 23, and for strengthening and maintaining that spirit of nationality and sentiment of race which would associate all of kindred blood wherever dispersed, the Royal Society of St. George was formed, and today branches of the organization exist in all parts of the Empire, and even in the United States.

The society, through its propaganda, has sought to correct the unfortunate mistake which has been made in confounding St. George of Lydda, England's Patron Saint, with George the infamous Arian Archbishop of Alexandria, a fraudulent army contractor, who was justly slain, A.D. 362; whereas St. George of England was martyred on April 23 (on a Good Friday), A.D. 303. Gibbon, the historian, is in a measure responsible for this unaccountable error, which has been handed down. As the national figurehead, it is desired to rehabilitate him in the affectionate regard of all English stock throughout the world; to revive his festival, in order to stimulate patriotism; to remind members of the English race of the glorious past, and the responsibilities which devolve upon members of the British race.

At Cressy, Poictiers and Agincourt, the banner of St. George was carried to great victories. The flag of England, in the days of Elizabeth, was the flag of St. George, and it was under this banner that Howard, Drake, Frobisher, Hawkins and Blake achieved such notable victories against Spain and France, and thus placed the prestige of England high. It was the flag of St. George which was unfurled on the little Revenge when, under the command of Sir Richard Grenville, a Spanish fleet of fifty-three ships was challenged, and practically destroyed. The lines of Tennyson recall in splendid detail the spirit of these English seamen, whose reward was to play well their part, and to leave to fate to record just what happened to their venture for Queen and country:

Under the redoubtable Blake, the cannon of English ships thundered along the shores of the Mediterranean, bringing succor to the weak and justice to the oppressed. Well might Cromwell say: "By such means as these, we shall make the name Englishman as great as that of Roman was, in Rome's most palmy days."

Englishmen and their descendants should never forget that the brilliant victories of Marlborough were won by men from the shores of England, descendants of Cromwell's all-conquering and unconquered Ironsides.

Can we ever forget how, during the late war, England's sons freely and voluntarily offered their swords and laid down their lives to uphold the honor of the Motherland? Our enemies beheld an Empire united. Then, for the first time in our long history, did we realize what Empire meant. Into the very soul of our people entered the full meaning of our patriot poet:

"Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we shall shock them.
Nought shall make us rue,
If England to itself do rest but true."

Sir Oliver Lodge Pays Tribute to Influence of Immortal Dramatist

Great Scientist Considers Shakespeare's Work in Relation to Science, and Quotes Declaration That Newton and Shakespeare Are Supreme in Geniuses of England

Address Given at Annual Banquet of Royal Society of St. George in London

THE place of Shakespeare in its relation to the modern world of science is told in the speech of Sir Oliver Lodge, noted scientist, and former principal of the University of Birmingham, in his remarks at the Royal Society of St. George banquet in London a year ago. Sir Oliver Lodge is interesting in any subject of which he speaks, and in dealing with the influence of the Bard of Avon he laid emphasis on the aspects of Shakespearian drama which are not often stressed on anniversaries of the poet's death (conjecturally also that of his birth).

The speech was as follows:

"My lords, ladies and gentlemen: It is not easy to follow an orator, and I wish that the Secretary of State for India were proposing this toast too. At the end of his speech he indicated how much better he could do it. (Laughter). Unlike him, however, I have not made any investigation about history, nor even about Shakespeare, because I am dealing with a subject which everyone is familiar with, and I should think nearly everything has been said about it that can be said. But as an introduction, I have sometimes sat on or near an ant-hill and watched the ants going about their business, hurrying, squabbling, biting, snatching; and I have felt, as many others no doubt have felt, that it was a sort of parable on the human drama—a representation of how humanity must look to any higher being who is not sufficiently high to be able to understand and sympathise. So might we imagine the aspect of humanity. For they are doing all these things; but they are also helping, caring, loving, aspiring; and we may hope, and indeed be sure, that the Higher Being that regards us is high enough to understand, to sympathise, and to be patient, welcoming good intentions, pitying the failures, and condemning only the selfish and the cruel.

THE HUMAN DRAMA

"Some great minds there have been, of our own race, who were able to apprehend the human drama—and it is the human drama of which I am speaking. They have been able to depict, and to hold the mirror up to their fellows. If you want to study the vice of ambition, you find it in 'Macbeth'; the folly of old age and the cruelty of youth are depicted in 'King Lear'; the penalty of indecision and of suspicious distrust of womankind on the part of a lovable nature, in 'Hamlet'; the excruciating torments of jealousy in 'Othello.' I sometimes wonder whether a dramatist has had to go through all these experiences before he can represent them with that vividness which the great ones achieve! That I do not know. They show an astonishing understanding and sympathy. Then if you want a study of ill-starred romantic love, you read it in 'Romeo and Juliet'; or a less violent variety of love's young dream in 'As you Like It'; an exuberant patriotism, such as we have often been reminded of this evening, in 'Henry V'; the ups and downs of statecraft and policy in 'Henry VIII'; an example of noble though misguided patriotism in the Brutus of 'Julius Caesar'; and the tragic failure of a weak but well-meaning character in 'Richard II'. Yes, and the dramatist did not shrink from other aspects of human life, he did not hesitate to depict vice and hideous cruelty in 'Titus Adronicus'. His aim was to see life steadily, and to see it whole, ignoring no aspect.

SELF-SACRIFICE

"Well, ladies and gentlemen, it is amazing to me sometimes to realise to what height the peaks of humanity have already risen, and how much good there is in the average man, the average woman, the self-sacrifice that is always forthcoming when the call arises. (Hear, hear). The way that quite common people, those whom we call common people, sacrifice themselves, run risks to rescue their fellows, in shipwreck, in colliery disasters, in fire, in all the great calamities that happen, is wonderful; there are always volunteers ready; they run into danger and they suffer. There is an innate nobility in man that must excite our imagination.

"How much good in many directions is already aimed at! And yet mankind is a new-comer to this planet. I do not know whether anybody realizes that. Astronomers and geologists tell us that the earth has lasted a thousand million years. It is easy to say a thousand million years, but it is not easy to imagine even one million years of that time, which was long before man appeared. The world has been, as it were, in labor, preparing for the human race. Also it seems, we are told by astronomers, that there is every likelihood that a period of somewhat the same length is in front of us. So far as the earth is concerned, we are in the middle of the times, but so far as humanity is concerned, we are at the very beginning. Mankind is in its infancy. Never despair or feel too cast down about our mistakes and blunderings. They are understood. They are like the mistakes of infancy. We can see children making mistakes and blundering, and regard them with an affectionate eye. That is, I expect, how we are regarded, or so I hope, by the High Powers, and we can take heart and feel that it depends very much on what we make of the future. The reins are being gradually put into our hands; we can guide our destinies to some extent now.

AT THE BEGINNING

"Always let us remember that we are at the beginning, and never be disheartened that perfection is not yet attained. What humanity will be like a million years hence, who is to say? Already it has thrown up peaks of great magnitude; the average is far below, but the tide is rising. Just think how much good there is in a city like this, the wonderful efforts toward raising the common weal. Earnestly the people are striving to benefit their fellows, to succor the oppressed, to heal the broken-hearted, to lift up those who are down; yes, and to try to put an end to war! That movement, which in our time I never expected to see, has come to us; we are near the beginning of it. The movement has begun. The American proposals are apparently being seriously considered by the nations. Defence, yes; protection, yes; aggressive war, no! Not among civilised people any more. (Applause). Let us make up our minds to look hopefully at the movement, and let us wish it Godspeed.

"This is a great age. I do not see why something great should not be accomplished. Lord Birkenhead was speaking of the Elizabethan age as the greatest literary era. I wish he had time to give us some samples. Undoubtedly it was a great age. It followed the Armada. Now what is to follow the Great War? I cannot tell what will come of it in literature, but I know what is coming of it in science; not coming out of it, but following it. I can tell you that in my belief this is one of the great ages in science that we are living in now. We cannot, when we live immersed in it, know fully what is going on, except what it is our business to study; but I believe the twentieth century is the most remarkable period in science that I have read of or know. Whether contemporary literature is great, or will be great, I cannot say, but science is growing fast. It is developing in some new directions, too, that I happen to know about. It is too early to foresee the consequences.

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE

"Genius arrives on the planet, we know not whence; it blossoms in unlikely places and unforseen ways, with momentous results. Today we think of England and what it is doing, let us remember our relatives and friends in speaking of England. We are thinking of those who use the language of England; the whole of the English-speaking race. If they only hang together, and I feel that they will hang together, they are a great engine for the progress of the world. (Applause.) I am thinking as you are, too, of the whole British Commonwealth, and of those who have built up the Northern Continent of America, may the bonds of friendship never be loosened!

"Coming back to this, what you, sir, have called this little island, or this little portion of the island, it is rather surprising, even rather awe-inspiring, to remember that England has produced the two greatest geniuses that have arrived on this planet, always excepting divine personages. I mean that of ordinary people England has produced the two greatest geniuses of humanity—one in science, the other in literature. If you ask anyone, any foreigner, what is the greatest name in the whole history of science, he will reply Isaac Newton—(hear, hear)—and he was born in Lincolnshire. If you ask anyone what is the greatest name in the whole literature of the world, the reply will be, him whose name we venerate today! Hail, William Shakespeare!" (Loud applause.)

"THE REVENGE"

And the pikes were all broken or bent,
And the powder was all of it spent;
And the masts and the rigging lay o'er the side,
When Sir Richard cried in his English pride
"We have fought such a fight for a day and a night
As may never be fought again;
We have won great glory, my men,
For a day less or more,
At sea or ashore, we die!
Does it matter when?
Sink me the ship, master gunner,
Sink her, split her in twain,
Fall into the hands of God,
Not into the hands of Spain."

Spirit of Shakespeare

Thy greatest knew thee, Mother Earth; unsoured
He knew thy sons. He probed from hell to hell
Of human passions, but of love deflowered
His wisdom was not, for he knew thee well.
Thence came the honeyed corner at his lips,
The conquering smile wherein his spirit sails
Calm as the God who the white sea-wave whips,
Yet full of speech and intershifting tales,
Close mirrors of us: thence had he the laugh
We feel is thine: broad as ten thousand beeves
At pasture! thence the songs, that winnow chaff
From grain, bid sick Philosophy's last leaves
Whirl, if they have no response—they enforced
To fatten Earth when from her soul divorced.

How smiles he at a generation ranked
In gloomy noddings over life! They pass.
Not he to feed upon a breast unthanked,
Or eye a beauteous face in a cracked glass.
But he can spy that little twist of brain
Which moved some weighty leader of the blind,
Unwitting 'twas the goad of personal pain,
To view in curst eclipse our Mother's mind,
And show us of some rigid harridan
The wretched bondman until the end of time.
O lived the Master now to paint us Man,
That little twist of brain would ring a chime
Of whence it came and what it caused, to start
Thunders of laughter, clearing air and heart.

—George Meredith.

Plays and Players

Premiere Showing of British Masterpiece at Capitol All This Week

First of England's Greater Film Productions, "Tommy Atkins," From the Well-Known Play, Featuring Lillian Hall Davis and Walter Byron, Opens at Local House Tomorrow

Played to Capacity Audiences In Vancouver During the Past Week

EVERY once in a while someone comes along with a new idea in motion picture entertainment that audiences cannot help taking notice of. Such is "Tommy Atkins," from the play by Ben Landeck and Arthur Shirley, which will be shown tomorrow at the Capitol Theatre, featuring Lillian Hall Davis and Walter Byron.

This is the first offering of World Wide Pictures, Inc., an organization backing the idea that pictures in order to provide realistic entertainment should be made on the locations where the stories are laid, and performed by people whom they portray.

That it is a good idea was evidenced last week in Vancouver, when capacity audiences sat up and took notice of a fine performance by a company of players new to the average theatregoer who handled with precision a stirring story smacking strongly of "Beau Geste," but actually made in Egypt and near London with the aid of English soldiers and tribes of the Sudan.

It would seem that the love interest behind this imported film is its mainspring. But looking further, it is discovered that the underlying current that motivates the action is sacrifice. Here, then, we have love and sacrifice, coupled with military action, and the result is realistic drama that does not linger on the way but moves swiftly to a most consistent and satisfying conclusion for entertainment purposes.

And it is for entertainment purposes that this picture is made, not forgetting the educational value contributed by the fact that the company went into the far Sudan to obtain realism which is spread on the screen with a colorful brush.

The stage attractions in conjunction with the fine British production, "Tommy Atkins," includes such artists as Reader and Seagar, two boys and keyboards two, featuring harmony singing and impromptu wit and humor that is guaranteed to convulse any audience, Rina McLeod, coloratura soprano, winner of second place in the late Fanchon and Marco opportunity contest, and Madge Rush, the popular danseuse. Chris Wade and his Capitol Stage Bend, along with "Smiling" Jack Medford, the singing M.C., complete the programme of stage specialties.

THE DESERT SONG HAS STRONG STORY

Mystery Concerning "Red Shadow" Forms Intriguing Plot for Operette at Royal Tomorrow

The story of "The Desert Song," playing at the Royal tomorrow, has considerably more substance to it than is usually found in operettas. It concerns a mysterious "Red Shadow," who is a sort of Robin Hood leader of a band of desert tribesmen which has kept the French Legion constantly on the jump as the rich are robbed for the benefit of the poor. Who this "Red Shadow" really is and how he wins the love of the charming little French maid is best told by the players in the large company of nearly 100 that Miss Albertson will bring here. This is the same company, by the way, that played for over a year in California, breaking house records everywhere.

In the case are Gary Breckner, Nenette Vallon, Charles Villar, Violette Derbeck, John Merkyl and John Wagner. There is also a sprightly bevy of singing and dancing girls as well as a symphony orchestra, directed by Cecil Stewart of radio broadcasting fame.

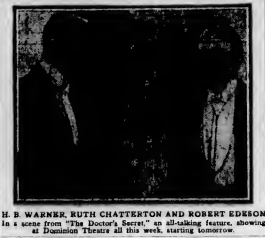
Famed Westminster Glee Singers Visit Victoria on May 2

Music lovers of this city will be delighted to know that the world-famed Westminster Glee Singers, that wonderful aggregation of Old Country Cathedral singers, are going to pay one more visit here before they sail for Australia and New Zealand, where they go to fill many urgent calls for concerts. The company has been added to since they last appeared on the Pacific Coast. There are now seven of England's famous boy sopranos and nine men soloists, including the well-known Irish cathedral tenor, Charles O'Connor. He recently sailed from England, where he has been singing in the Sheffield Cathedral, which will be so lovingly remembered by many old citizens of this city. It may be many years before Victoria will have the pleasure of again listening to this wonderful organization and the advice is to secure seats early for the farewell performances at the Royal Theatre, three days commencing Thursday, May 2.

VIOLETTE DERBECK

In "The Desert Song," which is playing for three days at the Royal Victoria Theatre, starting tomorrow

Retiring-From-Business Fur Sale at Foster's. Also sale prices on repairing and remodeling your old furs into 1929 styles. 1216 Government Street. Phone 1527.



H. B. WARNER, RUTH CHATTERTON AND ROBERT EDESON

In a scene from "The Doctor's Secret," an all-talking feature, showing at Dominion Theatre all this week, starting tomorrow.

Coyne Musical Co. In Double Bill at Playhouse All Week

"Blue Birds" and "On the Road," two of the best of the clever revues which have formed the stock-in-trade of that merry bunch, The Coyne Musical Comedy Company, will be staged all this week at the Playhouse Theatre. Also there is another George Ade story on the screen—said to be the best he ever has done. Lois Moran and Edmund Lowe are featured in the leading roles of "Making the Grade," a comedy romance produced for Fox by Alfred E. Green. The ensuing situations of the young millionaire trying to overcome his snobbish proclivities bring on a cyclone of laughs. The screen adaptation was done by Harry Brand. The well-balanced cast includes, besides the principals, Lucien Littlefield, Albert Hart, Rolfe Sedan, Gino Conti and Lia Tora.

The Federal Committee of Physical Culture, founded in Germany in 1895, now embraces over 30,000 separate organizations and more than 4,000,000 members.

SCOTLAND YARD'S WORK SCREENED

"The Ware Case," Showing at Columbia Tomorrow, Shows Detective's Careful Methods

The patient, careful way in which a Scotland Yard detective sets out to unravel a murder mystery is interestingly shown in First National's crime picture, "The Ware Case," which is the current attraction at the Columbia Theatre, starting tomorrow.

Detective fiction of any character—story, play and film—is very popular with the present-day public and few pictures of the kind so puzzling and intricate as "The Ware Case" have been shown in this country.

Also on the same bill is "Good Time Charley," a Warner Bros. production, featuring Helene Costello, Warner Oland and Clyde Cook. Others in the strong cast are Montagu Love, Julanne Johnston and Hugh Allan. Michael Curtiz directed.

At a military dance in Bombay one officer said to another as they adjourned for refreshments, "I don't know how it is, but my wife's lipstick always tastes different from any other woman's," and he carefully wiped his lips.

"Yes, doesn't it?" remarked the other absent-mindedly.

DRESSING SHOWS TOLD BY ACTOR

Mr. Fred Coyne Relates Experience of Moving His Company During Indian Tour

"One of the advantages of moving a company like mine from country to country," said Fred Coyne, whose company is making its farewell appearance at the Playhouse this week, is that it gives one a good opportunity to add the real local color touch to our shows. Take Indian costumes, for instance. In our Blue Birds revue which we are doing on Monday, one of the features is described as 'an entirely unveracious story of Indian life,' which I think fits it very well except as far as the costumes are concerned. These are genuine products, selected from the bazaars of India, a little touch of the real thing which anyone knowing the "Shiny East" will spot at once. But what a game collecting them! You drive down to the native shopping centres, the streets packed with buyers and sellers of all castes, creeds and colors; your guide stops you at last at an open-fronted shop where the merchant sits among his silks and brocades. A dense crowd immediately assembles, curious to know what can have brought the white sahibs and memsahibs to this purely Indian quarter. And then the display of stuffs, the selection and the haggling, for that is the whole art of shopping in the East. He names a price, you offer half, he laughs bitterly and implies that as you are a rich sahib, you could not grind the face of a poor man. You mention casually that he must be a thief, unless he is merely stricken with madness, to ask such prices. And so it goes on until, in spite of his assertions that you have ruined him, you make the deal and he smilingly hands the parcel to a waiting coolie. That coolie is another joke of the East. It is quite beneath the dignity of a sahib to carry even the smallest of parcels to the street, and so for a copper coin or so you pick up a boy with a basket who follows you around and carries your purchases.

And that is how it is that, when you see "The Rajah's Treasure" at the Playhouse, you will see the "pukka" Indian costumes, with two exceptions. Firstly, our Indian dancing girl's costume has been modified somewhat, for if the truth must be told, the real Indian dancing girls are a bulgy and uninteresting lot to our Western eyes, and I'll back Paula Loraine against the whole Indian corps de ballet when it comes to attractiveness. The second exception is that Sidney Burl declines pointblank to wear a splendid pair of Mohammedan shoes I bought for him in Karachi on the feeble excuse that 'they hurt his corns.' So if any critical member of the audience should notice that, when the two snake charmers enter in 'The Rajah's Treasure,' the taller and handsomer of the two is correctly dressed, while the short and insignificant fellow with the snake basket is wearing dancing pumps, they will know that the good intentions of the management to present things as completely as possible have been entirely foiled by a small man who considers that anything may be forgiven to him because he 'makes them laugh'."

"How did you get here?" said the hospital doctor to the patient.

"Flu," replied the victim softly.

All-Talking Days to Mark Dominion Film This Week

Paramount Features Will Include "The Doctor's Secret," Which Will Be Presented With Well-Known Favorites

Each day during the present week will be known as Paramount All-Talking Days," according to an announcement made yesterday by Manager Robertson. Paramount quality talking pictures throughout, from the short features to the main attraction entitled "The Doctor's Secret," will comprise the programme.

"The Doctor's Secret" is the latest full-length 100 per cent dialogue feature from Paramount. Of note is the outstanding cast assembled for this production, which includes Ruth Chatterton, for many seasons a star in her own right on the legitimate stage, and who made her debut recently in motion pictures in "Sins of the Fathers" opposite Emil Jannings; H. B. Warner, who has alternated from the stage and screen for the past fifteen years, and who has won a wide following for his portrayals; Robert Edeson, an old-time favorite, who has many notable characterizations to his credit, and John Loder, the young British actor of stage and screen fame.

The drama was adapted from Sir James M. Barrie's stage success, "Half an Hour," and was adapted as well as directed by the famous director, William C. de Mille.

Ladies' Musicale At Empress Hotel Wednesday, April 24

The Ladies' Musical Club will hold its last recital of the season next Wednesday afternoon in the Empress Hotel ballroom at 3.30. Artists assisting will be Miss Platt, soprano, who has recently come from Winnipeg; Miss Evelyn Harper, pianist, a pupil of Prof Shale; Dr. T. H. Johns, gold medalist of the present festival. Miss Irene Bick has organized a delightful string quartette of four violins, composed of Miss Bick, Adele Bucklin, Mrs. Aldous and Neva Stewart. They will be heard in two groups. The accompaniste will be Mrs. Green and Miss Dorothy Morton.

FILM PORTRAYAL OF LIFE FEATURED

Ian Keith Has Colorful Part in "The Street of Illusion" at Coliseum Monday

Ian Keith gives one of the most interesting character portrayals ever brought to the screen in Columbia's "The Street of Illusion," which will be the attraction at the Coliseum Theatre on Monday.

The plot revolves around the theatre and presents a play within a play, a theme which offers unlimited possibilities. The central character is an actor who, because of his own egotism, has repelled human beings and stood in the way of his own advancement. He sees about him illusion and tinsel. He longs to have true friends and taste of success and happiness; but because of his sour disposition the things he most desires elude him.

The actor sinks into the depths of poverty. He has a small room back of a tailor shop, is always bemoaning the heartless world and blaming everyone but himself for his condition. Among his earthly treasures are a necklace worn by Sarah Bernhardt and a picture of himself as a boy with Edwin Booth. How the man turns into a human monster, more animal that human, before he realizes that his condition is of his own making affords Ian Keith ample opportunity to do some great work.

DUET CONTEST IS OUTSTANDING ONE

Mrs. W. H. Wilson and Mrs. Allan Millhouse Are Medallists—Soprano Competition Good

Mrs. W. H. Wilson and Mrs. Allan Millhouse were commended by Dr. Daniel Protheroe, adjudicator of vocal contests in the Victoria Musical Festival, for their rendition of "Love Has Not Departed," by Brahms, in the preliminary and finals of class twenty-seven, held in the First Baptist auditorium yesterday morning.

The singers' voices were well balanced, their pitch was good and much thought had been given to the interpretation, he said. They were given eighty-six marks. Miss Marjorie Watson and Miss Dorothy Hartree came second in the duet class with eighty-four marks.

There was keen competition in class fourteen for sopranos under nineteen years. Dolly Rutledge won the silver medal with eighty-eight points. Miss Freda Spencer and Miss Elsie Truscott, who were given eighty-six and eighty-four points respectively, sang in a most charming manner and won the approbation of the adjudicator.

"This is the most even competition we have had in any contest during the festival. There was not a poor voice among the lot," Dr. Protheroe stated.

The vocal duet in class ten for girls under nineteen years was also closely contested. Enola Moss and Jean Shephard, of St. Margaret's School won the award with eighty-four points. Miss May Lewis and Evelyn Valiant were second with eighty-one points.

K. OF C. OFFICIAL WILL VISIT CITY

Representative of Supreme Council to Address Members Here on Tuesday

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 19.—Mr. W. A. Wells, representative of the Supreme Council, Knights of Columbus, will address members of two British Columbia councils during the week of April 22. Mr. Wells is one of several special representatives who provide a contact between the headquarters of the order here, and the more than two thousand subordinate councils in the United States, Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines.

Special council meetings will be called in each of the cities Mr. Wells will visit in order to give the local members of the order an opportunity to hear him. He will arrive in Victoria on Tuesday, and will be the guest of Victoria Council on that date. On April 25 he will meet the officers and members of Vancouver Council in Vancouver.

Mr. Wells' visit will mark the first time in a year that these councils have played host to a representative of the Supreme Council, and it is expected that each council will turn out its full membership to hear him.

During the course of a year the representatives of the Supreme Council travel thousands of miles in order to meet the officers and members of each council. They offer suggestions and advice in the conduct of council matters and in turn receive suggestions and information beneficial to the order at large.

RELIGION IN WORKADAY LIFE NEEDED

Questionnaire Sent Out to Jewish Laymen by Temple Brotherhoods Is Informative

ANSWERS COVER MUCH TERRITORY

CINCINATTI, Ohio, April 19.—An appeal to carry religious teachings into everyday life runs through a number of the responses of Jewish laymen to a questionnaire issued by the National Federation of Temple Brotherhoods.

The 1,222 men answering the questionnaire constitute 7 per cent of the 17,500 to whom the inquiries were sent, which is regarded as the highest percentage of responses ever received in such a survey. The answers came from 103 communities and 124 congregations in a total of thirty-one states and the District of Columbia and were gathered in one year.

"One of the many intricate, involved and unsolved questions of the day is concerned with the standard of morality of the generation of post-adolescent age," the foreword to the report of the survey said. "Opinions vary in the extreme as to whether or not a decadence is in the ascendency, and if so, whether the cause be the hyper-civilization (mechanical or otherwise) which our time has witnessed, or whether it be a falling away of that religious enthusiasm which marked the daily life of those who preceded us.

WHOM CHARGE AFFECTS

"Not only does this question concern this young generation, but it may fairly comprehend those one generation further advanced; for charges based upon keen observation seem to indicate a close interrelationship of these two generations. The effects of the older on the younger, be it for raising or lowering of spiritual ideals, appears to be responsible for whatever change has come about.

"It is our hope that the antidote shall be simple; easy to take; of far-reaching import; a salve to heal the religious eruptions which though not yet threatening, still challenge; that this survey shall not only show the cause but may lead the way to the naming of the cure.

"The survey was conducted in an attempt to answer the almost endless flow of accusations directed against the American Jewish laymen—particularly those affiliated with the Reform wing—that they are becoming more and more disinterested in religious matters.

BELIEVE IN RELIGIOSITY

"The great majority of the membership of the National Federation of Temple Brotherhoods, as well as those of us who have taken an active part in its membership and direction, sincerely and steadfastly believe in the deep-rooted religiosity of our men, even in this indifferent and materialistic generation.

"We are of the opinion that Judaism—religiously—is not only not weak, but that we are riding on the crest of another great wave of revival, wherein our laymen are searching anew for means of expressing their religious convictions, in consonance with modern thought and knowledge."

Of the 1,222 men returning their questionnaires, some 99 per cent answered the query as to whether or not they receive comfort from prayer. Of those responding, prayer does give comfort to 88 per cent.

"IT SEEMS UNFAIR"

"It seems unfair to me for one to pray only when he needs help," one man observed.

"I find prayer valuable in helping me to meet trying situations courageously," another said.

Of those responding, 26 per cent pray daily, 29 per cent pray occasionally and 45 per cent did not admit praying at all.

More of the younger than of the older men find unusual need for prayer in crisis of joy or sorrow, the replies indicated.

On carrying religion into life, some wrote thus:

"Less dogma and more exemplary lives."

"More ethics—less tradition."

"To me there is more religion in a smile, in a kind word, in the contemplation of the heavens than in the services on any of the holy days. I do not see that the Church—Jewish or Christian—touches our daily lives, and therefore until they do, I will have more reliance in our schools, scientists, economists and those who have an interest in our daily life rather than to spend my time in a synagogue listening to empty phrases."

MUST BE VIGOROUS

Religion, today, must be vigorous and up to date, to keep the interest of people who are obliged to be everlastingly on the move, to keep up with life," another man wrote.

A number of men urged greater warmth of spirit and less materialism for the modern church and also more juvenile and adult Jewish education.

As to the portion of the service preferred, the sermon rated first with 72 per cent of the men, prayer was first with 18 per cent and music with 9 per cent. A number of men said all three are important.

Among eleven suggested sermon subjects, five won first preference among three-fourths of the 1,222 men. The subject of Jewish problems led the field, 20 per cent of the men rating it first. Jewish movements came next with 18 per cent, spiritual matters third with 14 per cent, Jewish history fourth with 11 per cent, and social problems fifth with 10 per cent.

SERMON TOPICS

Others were: Civic questions 6 per cent, plays and novels, 8, biographies, 8; Biblical themes, 5; economic issues, 3, and political questions 3 per cent.

Of the 94 per cent of the men who answered the question as to how often they attend religious services 43 per cent indicated regularly and 42 per cent admitted occasional attendance. Nine per cent go to Temple on the high holy days only.

MASTER EDWIN BRAZIER

One of the greatest boy sopranos in the world now touring with the world famed Westminster Glee Singers, who play their farewell engagement at the Royal Victoria Theatre for three days, commencing Thursday, May 2, with a special children's matinee on the Saturday at 2.30 p.m.

The older men grow, the more regularly they attend Temple. Similarly, married men are more frequent than bachelors in attendance.

Some 93 per cent of the men enjoy participation in congregational activities.

Congregational singing was voted upon by 81 per cent. Of that number 81 per cent favor such singing and 76 per cent actually join in.

"But my friends do not enjoy my participation," one man wrote.

"Use of traditional congregational hymns, uniform from temple to temple, and not changing, so that one can drop into a strange temple, or return to one's own after a long absence, and meet long-remembered and loved tunes," was recommended by one man.

"Proper home training is the secret of religious welfare," another commented in reply to a question as to observance of religious traditions in the home.

The question of sermon topics evoked a wide range of responses.

"I approve of plays and novels for sermon topics if moral and spiritual questions are raised," a man observed.

ON GREAT MEN

"Want sermons on biographies of great men if they are religious," another said.

"I want social problems from a spiritual viewpoint," a third remarked.

The answers to the questionnaire were classified as follows:

1—Background of those replying.
2—Reactions to temple services.
3—Reaction to other temple activities.
4—Participation in home observances.
5—Suggestions and recommendations.

As to the first classification—the background—78 per cent have some formal religious training and 53 per cent read Hebrew. Some 72 per cent have no college education. Of the college men, 23 per cent under thirty years of age, 36 per cent are thirty to forty, and 41 per cent are past forty.

CLASSIFIED AS TO AGES

Of the noncollege men 12 per cent are under thirty years of age, 24 per cent are thirty to forty in age, and 64 per cent are past forty.

Some 85 per cent of the college men and 94 per cent of the noncollege men are members of congregations. Of these, two-thirds of the college men and almost four-fifths of the noncollege men have been affiliated ten years or more.

General recommendations included the following:

"More free religious schools."

"Participation of children in service."

"Modernize religion."

"More goodwill toward all men—less supersensitiveness."

The survey was conducted under the auspices of the committee on religious propaganda, of the Natoinal Federation of Temple Brotherhoods. The federation is affiliated with the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, with central offices in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Mr. Roger W. Streus, New York City, is president; Mr. Alexander Cahn, New Haven, Conn., chairman of the committee conducting the study, and Mr. Arthur L. Reinhart, Cincinnati, assistant secretary of the federation, were in charge of the work.

American Programmes Attract Canadian Fans

R. W. Ashcroft Warns Against Americanizing of Radio Numbers—Too Many Stations in United States and in Dominion

Sardines have a better time of it in their tins than most of the Canadian radio stations, and the majority of the broadcasters in the United States are no better off, according to R. W. Ashcroft, manager of the Transcanada Broadcasting Company. There are fifty-six stations in the Dominion ranging in power from 5 to 5,000 watts. In addition there are eighteen so-called "phantom" or "shadow" stations: that is, stations which have call letters only, and which lease the facilities of a physical station. These seventy-four physical and phantom transmitters in Canada are jammed on seventeen wave lengths, eleven of the channels being shared with the United States. Therefore, the Dominion has six exclusive wave lengths.

"There are four times as many stations on the air in both countries as there should be," Mr. Ashcroft said in a recent address before a meeting of the Advertising Club of Montreal. "Wave lengths have no geographical significance. They can be used anywhere. To avoid interference, however, stations using the same wave lengths at the same time should be remote from one another. Why not regulate broadcasting in a manner that would provide the greatest good to the greatest number, and that would prevent the monopolization of the air in Canada by American jazz and American propaganda by American manufacturers? No true Canadian in this country wants radio in this country Americanized to the extent that our movies and our theatres have already been Americanized, if it can be avoided. We cannot prevent American radio programmes from coming into Canada over the air—and we are truly grateful for many of them—but we can provide Canadian programmes which are just as good as they are. We admit," said Mr. Ashcroft, "that until about a year ago, Canadian radio was a huge joke—a travesty. None of us would, until recently, think of listening in to a Canadian station if we could get satisfactory reception from an American station. The situation is different today in Eastern Canada, and is rapidly becoming so in the West, and it can be still further improved. Probably we Canadians have been to blame, because of our apparent inability, until a short time ago, to give them the right kind of service, and programmes that were worth the name.

DISTRIBUTION OF WAVES

"Canada does not need more wave lengths," said Mr. Ashcroft, "but it is imperative that its present air channels should be made more navigable. A non-political, non-partizan Dominion Radio Commission should be appointed with plenary powers to regulate commercial broadcasting stations in Canada. This commission would have six exclusive and eleven shared wave lengths to deal with. I doubt if the United States will ever voluntarily give us any more, as they have their own troubles to deal with.

"Licences should be granted to six stations of not less than 5,000 watts capacity, located at or near Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary (or Edmonton) and Vancouver. This would utilize Canada's exclusive wave lengths.

Licences should also be granted to 'relay' stations of not less than 500 watts capacity at Charlottetown, Moncton, Quebec, Ottawa, London, Midland, Port Arthur, Saskatoon, Regina, Calgary (or Edmonton) and Prince Rupert. This would utilize Canada's eleven wave lengths which are shared with the United States. If desired, eleven or even twenty-two additional stations of low power and local coverage could also be accommodated on these eleven wave lengths, provided such stations were not adjacent to the 500 watters on the same wave length.

"The seventeen main stations would be amply able to give Canada 100 per cent service from coast to coast, and would be hooked together as a network for the broadcasting of chain or centralized programmes.

With this layout, the Canadian radio public (which is rapidly comprising the bulk of our population) could easily be provided, every evening in the week, with six hours' first class Canadian entertainment," said Mr Ashcroft. "Not a dial would need to be turned to tune in an American station. In fact, hundreds of thousands of American listeners-in would be tuned into Canadian stations, as is very much the case today with CKY of Winnipeg and CKGW of Toronto, two 5,000 watters."

Is Educational Director for N.B.C.

Arthur S. Garbett was named educational director of the Pacific division of the National Broadcasting Company by Don E. Gilman, Pacific division manager.

Mr. Garbett has been continuity editor at the San Francisco studios since the establishment of the Pacific division and the furtherance of educational programmes consistently has been a part of his regime. This new position, created for Mr. Garbett, comes as a logical culmination to his years of serious endeavor, which have brought about much important educational innovations as the R.C.A. "University of the Air" and the Standard School Broadcast.

Relieved of the responsibility of editing continuity, Mr. Garbett now will devote his entire time to the development of this important phase of broadcasting.

Mr. Garbett was formerly radio editor and music critic of The San Francisco News. He has been identified with radio since 1924, when he became popular as a speaker during the KPO Little Symphony concert hour. Before coming to San Francisco, Mr Garbett was assistant editor of The Etude, a position which he came from England to fill, and for some time was engaged in educational and editorial work for the Victor Talking Machine Company.

Heard at Children's Hour

Officially he's William Steinke. But to radio listeners and to the hundreds of artists and programme makers in the National Broadcasting studios in New York he's Jolly Bill. With Jane, a nine-year-old, he goes on the air every evening over stations associated with the N.B.C., and his programme, though planned and carried out for children, has one of the most enthusiastic audiences of any broadcast. In his spare time he's a cartoonist.

NEW SYSTEM TO COMBINE RIVAL CHAINS

CFRB, Toronto, Is First Canadian Station to Link Up With an American Network

CANADIANS OBJECT TO PAYING OF FEES

NEW YORK, April 20.—Western programmes on a grand scale and more frequent hook-ups with Canadian radio stations are the newest prospective developments in chain broadcasting. Fast gaining substantial economic strength by virtue of the fact that revenues from chain advertising are now approaching an aggregate of $1,500,000 monthly, the two existing national networks are fully awake to the new problems of programme expansion.

The third projected national chain, starting with a nucleus of five stations along the Pacific Coast owned by Adolph F Linden, Seattle banker, is promising to distribute over the country the Far Western talent, which includes many of the entertainment stars that have been attracted to Hollywood by the "talkies."

Backers of this chain, to be known as the American Broadcasting Co., propose to compete directly with the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System in bidding for the attention of the radio audience of the whole nation. It was stated by the company's officials here today that the new chain expects to have at least twenty stations hooked up by next Autumn and has ample assurances of procuring the necessary telephone wire links between stations.

STATIONS LISTED

The reported purchase of three Brooklyn stations by Western interests is now revealed as a move toward consolidating them and then going before the Federal Radio Commission for authorization to establish one larger station near New York City in their place. This station would be the Eastern "key" of the proposed network.

Many commitments have been obtained from stations throughout the country which are eager to join the new network according to an American Broadcasting Company representative, speaking in the absence of Mr Linden, who has just left New York to return to Seattle. It is appreciated, however, that the company faces hard sledding in landing new advertising accounts and surviving at least a few years of heavy operating losses such as its predecessors have sustained.

So far the only stations known to be part of the proposed network are the five owned by Mr Linden, which are KJR, Seattle; KEX, Portland; KGA, Spokane; KYA, San Francisco; and KVTR, Los Angeles. Besides the options obtained on the three Brooklyn stations, it is only known that KLZ, Denver; KDYL, Salt Lake City; WIBO, Chicago, and WJSV, Washington, have had negotiations looking toward tie-ups with the new chain.

Columbia and N.B.C. officials express little concern with the prospective new competition, merely remarking that a third venture into national broadcasting is a hazardous undertaking from a fiscal viewpoint. It is pointed out by William Paley, president of the Columbia Broadcasting System, that only now, just twenty-seven months since the inception of the first large network, are the chains beginning to realize a profit.

The inauguration of the third chain, the date for which has not been fixed, will mean that the five Pacific Coast units will sever their present affiliation with the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Columbia last week announced that it had linked CFRB, Toronto, as the first Canadian station to join an American chain. Further expansion in Canada, with programmes sponsored by products manufactured both in the United States and Canada, may be looked for from both the N.B.C. and Columbia. The Columbia chain's president said today that preliminary discussions have already taken place with the New York representatives of the newly-formed Transcanada Broadcasting Company, a chain of sixteen stations extending across the Dominion from coast to coast, relative to regular hookups with the American chain for two-way exchanges of programmes.

This augurs early offerings of American programmes to the Canadian listeners directly from their own stations and of Canadian talent to listeners in the United States through stations on this side of the border. Thus far the listeners on either side of the boundary have been able to "swap" mostly by tuning in high-powered stations or stations near the border which could be heard most consistently.

Neither the problem of line tolls nor "tariffless advertising," peculiarly enough, present the chief drawback to the oft-proposed Canadian hookups with the more highly-developed chain broadcasting systems of the United States. The thing the Canadian stations are protesting against loudest is the heavy copyright royalty fee that the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers wants to exact from Canadian stations using its music.

A test court case between the society and certain radio interests in Canada that are unwilling to pay annual fees such as are paid by American stations is imminent, according to well-informed advices. Stations in the United States pay annual royalty licences to the society ranging from $500 to $25,000

Announcer Has Radio Personality

Whether or not Howard Milholland's name is announced when he comes on the air, very few fans fail to recognize the voice of the popular KGO announcer and studio manager, according to mail received by the General Electric station.

Milholland is possessed of one of the most distinctive personalities on the air. It makes no difference if he is on the air or away from the station, all Milholland has to do is to speak a few words and his voice is immediately identified.

CLASSICS ON AIR OVER CFCT MONDAY

On Monday evening from 6·15 to 7 15 p.m. CFCT, Victoria's broadcaster, will present the Sunset Concert Orchestra in an hour of classical music. The nightly hour with the Sunset Broadcasters will be declared open when the ballet music from Delibes' "La Source" is heard coming over the ether. Rimsky-Korsakow's unusual work, "A Song of India," is also slated for Monday evening, as well as two "Spanish Dances," by the brilliant Moskowski. The Sunset Concert Orchestra will render an intermezzo by the French-Canadian composer Laundeau, entitled "Twilight," while a selection from Leoncavallo's opera, "I Pagliacci," or "The Clowns," will make a fitting close for the hour of orchestral music over CFCT.

BULLS FAIL TO ATTRACT FOLLOWERS

Prices Move Irregularly Higher and Liquidation Is Readily Absorbed but Sales Total Is Small

MARKET FOR BONDS SHOWS FIRM BASIS

NEW YORK, April 20.—Bulls again staged a demonstration on the stock market in today's abbreviated session, but with the Federal Reserve advisory council's unexpected meeting in Washington, and the critical stage reached by the reparations conference, they were unable to attract following.

Prices were irregularly higher as week-end liquidation was readily absorbed, but total sales aggregated only 1,292,310 shares. The credit situation was regarded more optimistically with the recent ease in time money, and bankers looked for fairly comfortable conditions next week.

New York banks, however, extended their borrowings at the Reserve to meet the midmonth requirements, and are expected further to reduce their loans in the market as a result.

The day's business news largely affected the automobile industry. The Department of Commerce reported a new high record output of 584,733 machines in March, which caused some uneasiness over the possibility of overproduction. This uneasiness was entirely dissipated as a market factor by the record earnings reported by Hudson, first quarter, and the statement of the management that dealers' stocks were below normal. President Sloan of General Motors, returning from Europe said he looked for a record year for his company.

American Telephone and Bethlehem Steel were again sent up to new high prices. Bohn Aluminum and Foundation Company also reached new highs. Sparks-Withington jumped more than 14 points to a new high.

Montgomery-Ward, Woolworth, Sears-Roebuck, Childs, and Frank G Shattuck made substantial gains. Some of the amusement shares were again well bought, Keith Albee preferred jumping 5 points, Stanley Company gaining, and Werner Brothers jumping about 6 points.

Motors turned heavy, Graham-Paige dropping 3 points to 33, a new low for the year. Cree Carpet continued down hill.

The commodity markets were generally dull. Foreign exchanges were quiet as traders awaited the turn of affairs at the reparations conference on Monday. The German mark sagged slightly to 23.68 cents. The Spanish peseta touched a new low for the year at 14.68 cents. Sterling was steady with cables at $4.85 1-4.

Some irregularity cropped out in the bond market today, after a week of steady improvement and growing confidence in the prospects of the coupon securities. Week-end selling affected the industrials and higher grade rails, but the junior rails continued to forge ahead on good investment demand. The underlying firmness of the market was reflected in slightly better prices for most of the United States Government obligations.

German Governments continued soft. British 5 1-2's and French Republic 7's also sagged.

A court has decided that a cow in the road always has the right of way. This indicates that the courts are just learning what the cows have always known.

DO NOT OVERDRAW YOUR ACCOUNT.

Both State and Federal Bank examiners have ruled that banks must not allow overdrafts. In fact, in some states, laws have been enacted making it a misdemeanor punishable by a heavy penalty, to draw against an insufficient balance.

• • •

It is the duty of the depositor to see that his balance is sufficiently maintained to meet outstanding cheques. The bank is not obliged to notify him when his balance falls below the required amount.

In reality, an overdraft is a loan, without permission or security and is not looked upon with favor by the courts. However, a bank can bring suit to collect it the same as upon a note with interest at the legal rate from the day the depositor is notified of the overdraft.

Experience of banks shows that the percentage of total depositors who write cheques against insufficient funds is not large, but that the frequency of the occurrence is due to the fact that with some persons it comes to be a matter of habit.

The quickest way for a man to ruin his credit is to draw cheques for more than his balance. The bank is not allowed to permit the overdraft and the cheque is returned "N.S.F." (Not Sufficient Funds). The party you gave the cheque to is upset, sometimes embarrassed, and your credit gets a "black eye" which will take many days to heal. Always make sure you have a sufficient balance to cover all cheques that you write.

MINES EXHIBIT REAL FIRMNESS

TONE OF STOCKS FEATURE ON TORONTO MARKET YESTERDAY

Oils Continue Comparatively Steady—Abana Shows Exceptional Activity

(Noble, Forlong & Co.)

TORONTO, April 20. — Mines showed decided firmness and strength on the local market today. While no large net gains were made the feature of the stocks was their tone. Oils continued comparatively steady. Exceptional activity was noted in Abana, the stock, after fluctuating considerably, closing strong after a 22 cent gain. Pend Oreille closed 35 cents higher, although slight softening took place toward the close. "Rights" were up 20 cents.

Noranda and Lake Shore showed net advances of 25 cents. Sherritt-Gordon and Sudbury Basin were comparatively steady. Teck Hughes suffered a recession of 20 cents. International Nickel opened a shade lower, touched $47.80 and closed 5 cents less. Amulet gained 4 cents, with firmness apparent in trading.

Trading in oils resulted in a slight softening of Dalhousie and Foothills. Home Oil opened strong at $21.50 but eased off 25 cents, a net loss of 5 cents. Maylend was up 25 cents.

Wright Hargreaves stands as an example of that N.S.P. description. A few days ago it was in a hurried rush upwards to lead the entire mining market. Today its departure to lower levels was equally as noteworthy. Definite decision to cut the mill tonnage, a change in management with the public and shareholders baffled as to what is coming next, according to one broker, has rid the stock of its old popularity.

Kirkland Lake Mine is understood to be in good grade ore, thirty feet wide, on the 2,850 and 2,975 levels, over close to the Teck boundary. Work on the 3,250 has also been extremely encouraging and meanwhile the shaft is being pushed down another 400 feet.

Chaput Hughes—Drilling contract was recently awarded, the drilling to be done from Kirk Lake's lowest level. The general understanding is that Kirk Lake, in taking out Chaput stock for its exploration campaign, will in the future hold control of its southern neighbor, thus making one larger property of real recognition in deep development.

Moffatt Hall—Seems to have no definite results from drilling done in recent months under McIntyre's supervision. It is said McIntyre has not correlated the drilling into commercial ore deposition, and further exploration and development plans are being laid. McIntyre had an option calling for an expenditure of something like a million dollars, after which it would hold control.

Harker—Still has about another 145 feet to go before reaching the shaft objective. All effort on the property is concentrated in pushing down the shaft.

Graham Bosque—In drifting on the 500-foot level is showing a width of over six feet and, while average values have been not over $7 gold to the ton, wider shear zones are being encountered.

DEMANDS FOR CREDIT ARE PAST PEAK

Coming Weeks Expected to Bring Further Relaxation of Money Rates in United States at Least

BUSINESS REPORTS STILL ENCOURAGING

No Evidence That High Cost of Money Proving Obstacle—Iron and Steel Specially Favorable

(Branson, Brown & Co., Ltd.)

TORONTO, April 19.—Contrary to general expectations brokers' loans in New York showed a relatively small decline this week. It is true that this is the fourth consecutive week in which loans have shown a decrease, but it is significant that the total reduction of $360,000,000 since the high point reached on March 20, is still substantially below the decrease of $380,000,000 last December, and $404,000,000 last June, following the two major market reactions in 1928.

However, there are already definite signs of easement in the credit situation as reflected in the call money market and a small decrease this week in time money rates. This would suggest that, in the United States at least, Spring seasonal demands for credit for business and agricultural purposes have reached and are passing their peaks, and the coming weeks should bring a still further relaxation of money rates.

In the meantime, however, there is practically no evidence that the current high cost of money is holding business back. Encouraging reports continue to come from practically all lines both in Canada and in the United States. Conditions are particularly favorable in the iron and steel industry. This is being reflected in market activity and strength in the shares of Steel Co. of Canada, Page Hersey and Standard Steel Construction. Sentiment towards Massey Harris and Cockshott Plow has also been bullishly inclined this week. In the agricultural implement group, Waterloo Manufacturing at a price below 30 would appear to hold out attractive possibilities. The company earned 3.42 per share on the 87,500 shares Class A and B stock outstanding year ending October 31, 1928. An initial dividend of 25 cents of the Class A stock was paid August 1, 1928, and quarterly since. The principal product of the company is a threshing machine which is highly regarded by the agricultural communities.

In general, the agricultural industry is in a sound and prosperous condition in Canada at present, and prospects for Waterloo Manufacturing are regarded as being very promising. De Forest Crossley Radio experienced a well-merited advance this week. The company and United States subsidiaries are the largest manufacturers of radio sets in the British Empire. Net earnings for the year ended December 31, 1928, were equal to 5.92 per share on the 33,000 shares of the N.P.V. common stock outstanding.

Sales for 1928 exceeded those of 1927 by 57 per cent, and unfilled orders for delivery during the first two months of the current year were equal to sales for the first six months of 1928. The radio industry experienced the most satisfactory year in its history during 1928. It was also the best year in De Forest Crossley Radio Company's history. For those in a position to watch developments in the industry, the shares of this company offer speculative possibilities.

Wall Street Journal

(Branson, Brown & Co., Ltd.)

NEW YORK, April 20.—Definitely easier money conditions stood out as the dominating economic factor at the week-end. Time funds are pressing for employment in increasing volume, indicating continuance of the present downward trend of rates for this class of accommodation. With the mid-month transactions nearing completion, a period of relative comfort in the demand loan market appears in prospect.

In addition to checking the liquidation on the Stock Exchange improvement in the credit situation is finding reflection in more wholesome business conditions.

With fears of the influence on general business of high interest rates relieved by a larger supply of funds for commercial purposes, stocks gave their best Saturday performance in several months. Some irregularity was created during the first hour by the familiar evening-up process, but profit taking was quickly absorbed and prices turned upward the last hour, the first time such a development has occurred at the week-end and since the market was unsettled by credit uncertainty in early February.

NEW YORK SUGAR

NEW YORK, April 20.—Raw sugar was quiet and unchanged today at 3.64 for spots Cuban duty paid, and 3.81 for duty frees. No sales were reported although it was believed that late yesterday local refiners bought 20,000 bags of Philippines and 10,000 bags Porto Rican for early May arrival at 3.61. Refined was unchanged at 4.90 for fine granulated with second hands available below this quotation, but business light.

MARKET IS TOP HEAVY FOR A TIME

Loss of Confidence in Farm Relief Legislation Causes Selling of Wheat During Past Week

GENERAL WINTER OUTLOOK IS GOOD

(Branson, Brown & Co., Ltd.)

CHICAGO, April 19.—Wheat: The belief that the farm relief legislation would not become immediately effective, and that, judging from the president's message it would not be as radical as some figured, caused a lot of selling of wheat the past week.

Farm relief has been the main support of the wheat market for some time, in fact, ever since the crop got far enough along to disclose its generally splendid condition. With the favorable crop prospects and the bearish statistical situation, the market became top heavy, as bulls were discouraged and outside buying support feeble.

In spite of the heavy selling and the drastic decline in prices, however, the open interest in wheat showed a surprisingly small decrease and, apparently, some holders are still inclined to wait out the Washington developments, as it is believed the ultimate effect of the farm relief measures will be of a stabilizing character. Wheat prices are on a comparatively cheap basis, and in Canada there appears to be little pressure much under this level.

The general outlook for the Winter wheat crop is excellent, but it is not yet made, and numerous things could still happen to cut down the promise before harvest. European crop conditions appear to be less favorable than in this country, the Spring being late and cold, with Spring seedings delayed, while some Winter killing is now indicated in several countries. Consumption of white bread is increasing both in European and in non-European countries and, according to foreign advices, the demand is expected to continue active throughout the Summer.

WORLD'S STOCKS

World's stocks appearing April 1 were estimated at 115,000,000 bushels more than a year ago on that date; so the necessity for a continued big demand still exists. With any lowering of the crop promise this 115,000,000 bushels would not cut so much figure; but, if good yields are secured again this year throughout the Northern Hemisphere, the situation at harvest would be a weak one.

It is not expected that any farm relief programme will be put in effect in time to be operative for the coming crop, and so far as domestic conditions are concerned, this is sure to be a big factor. The farm board will endeavor to keep down production, and it is possible some feasible plan will be worked out to expedite the importing of at least a fair part of the crop in competition with other countries.

Argentina is not shipping a great deal of wheat, but is supposed to have a big surplus to distribute over the crop year. Australia has already shipped a larger part of its surplus, and a good share of it has gone to non-European countries. India has a little larger crop than last year, but under normal, with quality poor owing to drought during the filling period. Canada has received considerable snow or rain, which has relegated the drought talk to the background.

Visible stocks in this country are not decreasing at all rapidly, but the primary receipts are now the smallest in a long time, which should cause more important decreases. Flour trade is rather slow, as buyers are not particularly confident as to wheat prices holding.

CORN

The weakness in wheat the forepart of the week unsettled the corn market, causing a sharp decline; but recently corn has been relatively strong, and the general conditions in regard to supply and demand are more favorable than in wheat. Stocks in sight are materially smaller than a year ago. Primary receipts are much smaller than last year, and there has been no country selling of importance in some time. Farm relief measures are likely to keep country sales down to a minimum for a while. Local shipments to Canadian forwarding points are heavy, and it is by no means certain that export buying will not be witnessed again, as late reports from Argentina indicate that the surplus will be about 207,000,000 bushels. Danubian countries are having a late Spring and corn planting has been delayed. An excellent domestic trade in cash corn is indicated, and it is not impossible that supplies may be as small during the Summer as last year.

Oats — Receipts continue small and this market holds fairly well, May oats being at a premium over the July; the only grain in which this is the case. The movement of oats is by no means commensurate with the amount of oats supposedly back on the farms. Seeding is pretty well finished in most sections.

For Your Protection Your Investments Should Be Sound

Our Stock and Bond Report Contains Information Of Value. Mailed Free

Do you buy stocks because some one has told you that certain issues will register a sharp advance, or do you buy stocks after a careful study of the structure of the companies?

In the first instance you are blindly throwing your savings into the market with the hope that you will be able to clip off a substantial profit in a very short time.

On the other hand, if, after careful consideration of the company's position you find it sound, you are protected in the event of a sudden recession of prices, knowing your stock has merits that will eventually justify higher prices.

The average investor has not the time nor the funds required to keep in close touch with the activities of companies in which he proposes to buy stock. For this purpose we maintain a Statistical Department, from which full information regarding all mining and oil companies may be secured.

Appropriate adjustment of conversion terms and voting rights will be made in the event of the payment of a stock dividend or in the event of sub-division, consolidation or any other similar change of common shares, but no fractions of shares will be issued in conversion.

Transfer Agent: The Royal Trust Company, Toronto Registrar: Toronto Agency Company, Limited, Toronto

BUSINESS—National Sewer Pipe Company Limited, was incorporated in 1928 as an Ontario company to acquire the undertakings, properties and assets of Ontario Sewer Pipe and Clay Products, Limited, Dominion Sewer Pipe & Clay Industries, Limited, Clay Products Agency, Limited, and of The Hamilton and Toronto Sewer Pipe Company Limited, with the exception of certain special accounts and investments not necessary to the carrying on of the Company's operations. These constituent companies, which have been established for many years, are engaged in the manufacture and sale of vitrified clay sewer pipe, wall coping, flue lining, vitrified clay conduits, segment sewer blocks, radial chimney blocks and other vitrified clay products. Other lines of manufacture are being developed by the Company under the active direction of its Ceramic Engineer.

Modern and efficient plants are maintained in Hamilton, Mimico, Swansea and Aldershot, Ont. The clay deposits are in the Townships of East and West Flamboro and Nelson, and constitute the only known natural supply in the Province of Ontario, suitable for the manufacture of the above products. The executive and sales offices are located in Toronto and most of the products of the Company are sold to municipalities, contractors and building supply dealers throughout the Province of Ontario, the balance of the products being marketed throughout the Dominion. It is estimated by the President that the major portion of the vitrified products of this character used in Ontario is now produced by National Sewer Pipe Company, Limited.

ASSETS—According to the Balance Sheet as of 31st October, 1928, as certified by Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth, Guilfoyle & Nash, and Messrs. Fred Page Higgins & Co., adjusted to give effect to the present financing, the change in the capital structure and the redemption of the 7% Preference Stock, and having regard to the valuation of clay lands by the Company's Engineer, the total net tangible assets are as follows:

Net Fixed Assets
Real Estate, Buildings, Plant, Machinery and Equipment (appraised by National Appraisal Company, Limited, at $1,622,887.87)	$1,379,331.36
Clay Lands as valued by the Company's Engineer	400,000.00
		$1,779,331.36
Net Current Assets, after making provision for all Current Liabilities		510,677.19
Total Net Tangible Assets		$2,290,008.55

Equal to $57.27 for each Class "A" Share of no par value.

Goodwill and patterns are carried on the books of the Company at $1.00

EARNINGS—The Net Earnings of the constituent companies whose businesses were purchased, after making adequate provision for depreciation, depletion, and Dominion Government Income Taxes, and allowing for interest savings, as certified by Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth, Guilfoyle & Nash and Messrs. Fred Page Higgins & Co., were:

For the year ended 31st October, 1925	$171,641.30	For the year ended 31st October, 1927	$150,530.34
For the year ended 31st October, 1926	140,083.57	For the year ended 31st October, 1928	267,457.74

DIVIDEND POLICY—The President has stated that it is the intention of the Directors to pay quarterly dividends of 60c. per share on the Class "A" Stock (the first to be payable 15th June, 1929), at the rate of $2.40 per share per annum.

PURPOSE OF ISSUE—The proceeds of this financing will be utilised principally to retire the 7% First Preference Stock and certain loans which were created as a result of the purchases of the assets of the constituent companies previously referred to and the balance for the general purposes of the Company.

MANAGEMENT—The management of the Company will remain in the hands of Mr. Ryland H. New and his associates who will continue in active direction of its affairs.

We have purchased and offer these shares if, as and when issued and accepted by us subject to the approval of all legal details by Messrs. Blake, Lash, Anglin and Cassels for the Purchasers, and by Messrs. Starr, Spence and Hall for the Company.

PRICE: $38.50 per Share

Interim certificates are now ready for delivery. The right is reserved to reject any or all applications, and also in any case to award a smaller amount than is applied for. It is the intention of the Company to make application at an early date to list the Class "A" shares on the Toronto Stock Exchange.

The information contained herein has been approved by Ryland H. New, Esq., President of National Sewer Pipe Company, Limited.

DESCRIPTIVE CIRCULAR WILL BE SENT ON REQUEST.

Orders may be telegraphed or telephoned at our expense.

MINE STOCKS STAGE RALLY

Snowflake Advances 16 Cents on Turnover of 90,000 Shares — Pend Oreille Closes 50 Cents Up

OIL ISSUES ALSO IN GOOD DEMAND

VANCOUVER, April 20.—The demand for both mine and oil shares was keen on the stock exchange Saturday with strength being displayed all along the line.

Snowflake, in the mines division, was the feature, with sales of better than 90,000 shares and a net advance of 16 cents to 39 cents. Pend Oreille climbed up to $7.50, closing 50c stronger at $7.00, while the rights, after selling up to $2, closed 5 cents firmer at $6.75. Reeves was 9 cents up at $2.30 and George Copper 20 cents higher at $7.20. Grandview improved 21 1-2c to 47 1-2 cents; Noble Five, 2 cents to 67 cents, while gains of fractions to two points were spread through the balance of the list. Mohawk, with sales of 100,000 shares, led in volume and closed fractionally firmer.

In the oils, Royalite was in good demand from $158.00 to $164.00, closing unchanged at $155.00. Home Oil turned over in volume up to $22, finishing 35 cents stronger at $21.50. Devenish, on a moderate trade hardened 22 cents to $1.30. Dalhousie, with little stock offering, was up 15 cents to $5.80, and Mayland 45 cents to $9.80. Alberta Pacific Consolidated was a heavy trader, finishing a point firmer at $3.75, while United Oils, at $15.10, was up 25 cents. The one weak issue, Advance, moved down 25 cents to $8.50. The balance of the list ranged from about steady to 20 cents stronger.

Mining News

(H. E. Hunnings & Co., Ltd.)

(B. E. Hunnings & Co., Ltd.)

TORONTO, April 20.—Drillers shot McLeod No. 1 well Friday and brought back the original gas flow, producing from depth of 3,915 feet.

Production test is being made of Royalite No. 10 well.

Crew has started placing diamond drill under new derrick of Home No. 2, which has been cemented on top of limestone. Diamond drill believed to have around 150 feet to go. Home No. 1 was first well brought in by diamond drill and it escaped all troubles and freeze-up.

Vulcan No. 1 has drilled past top of lost tools and flow of gas has increased from original flow of 90 barrels to 140 barrels.

When Okalta split is complete there will be outstanding 1,743,700 no par common and 3,937 preferred $100 par value. Present common 13,500, split 100 for 1, takes 1,300,000 new common. Will increase common 450,000 shares to retire present preferred, but only 3,937 preferred out, so that there will remain in treasury from unallotted preferred split 56,300 new common. Proposed issue of one new $100 preferred for one old, which will take 3,937 new $100 shares.

Calmont - Dallas amalgamation may be consummated sooner than expected. First plan was to exchange three Dallas for one Calmont, when Calmont No. 2 well was into limestone, but Mr. Dallas says he may call shareholders' meeting shortly to decide if they should put it through sooner.

Imperial Oil, Calgary headquarters, made two important announcements regarding Home. Completion of a sturdy derrick to support a powerful diamond drill at Home No. 2 is one of the announcements made and diamond drill is now being installed at the well. This work should be finished in a few days, when drilling will be resumed. No. 2 has been drilled a few feet into lime, where casing has been cemented safely to withstand the terrific pressure which is struck in limestone in the Turner Valley. Total depth of the well is 5,353 feet, deeper than Home No. 1, which struck its big production at 5,280 feet.

At Home No. 3 a fishing job has been delaying progress for the past two weeks, but this has been overcome. A new hole has been made and casing is being cemented during the week-end.

Pend Oreille rights to take up one share new at $5 for each share now held, to shareholders of record of April 20. Rights expire June 1.

CLOSING LETTER

A firm market closed the week-end both in oils and mines, the slight recessions of yesterday being forgotten on the report of encouraging news. Mayland took a high of $9.85 and closed the session at $9.75, a gain of 27 points on a 2,700 turnover. On reports of a heavy gas flow and the hooking up of a control head, Calmont held firm to the previous close of $3.85 after a slight profit-taking recession, turning over 4,800. Devenish went up to $1.35, a gain of 25 on 13,300. The well is showing 35 barrels in the bailer of crude and will be drilled deeper. A.P. Consolidated took a climb for a short time, but dropped back to the previous close of $3.85 on 8,400.

Southwest Pete was strong at $5.25, getting its first real attention of the week. Mercury was steady at $1.40 on 2,600 trade. Dalhousie gained 10 and closed $5.90 asked. Home gained 75 to a $22 close. Royalite gained $3 to $160. United gained 25 to $15.25. Dallas up 25 to $1.75; Sterling Pac. steady at $3; McDougall New up 15 to $4.65; McDougall Exploration up 50 to $6.50; Advance was off 50 to $8.50; Associated $6 bid; Freehold up 5 to $1.75.

Snowflake opened 5 points up at 31, closing at 40, a net gain of 17 on 78,000 turnover. Pend Oreille was stronger, gaining 60 to a close of $7.10. Grandview picked up 2 points to 48. George Copper at $7.25 gained 25 points. Other mine issues fairly firm. A good market on both sides, with buying on the long side. General indications of a good week looming up in both markets.

Search Is Made for Missing Kootenay Man

CRANBROOK, April 20.—Herbert Noyce, Kootenay Orchards farmer, has been missing from his home since noon Wednesday. Provincial police and neighbors have been carrying on an unavailing search. Bloodhounds in charge of provincial police from Okotoks, Alta., arrived today to work on the mysterious case.

SOMETHING HARDER

A "baby" car collided with a big sedan. The chauffeur of the latter jumped out and surveyed with indignation a very bad dent in the side of his elaborate coachwork.

"Did you do that?" he asked the other driver.

"Yes, I'm afraid so," was the apologetic reply.

There was a deep silence, during which the chauffeur looked first at his damaged car, and then at the offending "baby."

"Well," he said at length. "I don't believe it. I must have hit a brick."

"Isn't it hard," said the landlady, "to think this poor lamb was cut down in its youth to satisfy our appetites?"

"Yes," replied the unhappy boarder at the end of the table. "It is tough."

MORNING STOCK LETTER SHOWS MARKET STATE

Simplifying of Bethlehem Funded Debts Is Recommended by Financial Experts

NEW HAVEN STOCK IS BOUGHT IN

(R. P. Clark & Co. (Victoria), Ltd.)

We think it was quite obvious that news of the Federal Reserve conference at Washington, which apparently was conducted with the greatest secrecy, put a damper on the market at a time when it looked as if the quiet recovery of the second half of this week were going to be extended. At the same time, it also showed that the market appears not at all sure of its ground, but is still feeling its way.

There are exceptions to the uncertainty in trend, as there are bound to be, in the present market. One of these exceptions continues to be Bethlehem Steel. If the company, as reported, should decide to simplify funded debt, the development, we think, would be fundamentally constructive. The funded debt structure of Bethlehem Steel is rather a complicated one, the simplification of which would be a decided forward step in supplementing production co-ordination accomplished during the past few years with a cohesive capital structure. A more immediate influence is perhaps the expected earnings statement for the first quarter, which, it is anticipated, will show the full year's dividend on the common to have been earned in the first three months.

New Haven is another exception in the present market. The buying in the stock seems to be very persistent and confident. Earnings last year were equal to $8 a share on the common, and thus far in 1929 a substantially higher return than that is indicated. In our opinion, what New Haven has done Erie has an excellent chance to duplicate. The improvement in New Haven was not accomplished in weeks, or in months for that matter, but took a long time to develop. A similar development, in our opinion, has taken place in Erie, which earned approximately $5 a share on the common last year, and which in the first two months of 1929 showed a gain in net operation income of 25 per cent. The problem of reducing operating ratio is being successfully met by the Erie management, and it is important to remember that every 1 per cent reduction in this ratio means over 75 cents a share on the common stock.

STOCK MARKET OPINIONS

Prince & Whiteley—Some few stocks would move forward brilliantly for a short time and then become heavy. Those are our reasons for believing that the market has not yet definitely turned upward.

Hirsch, Lilienthal & Company—Look for a traders' market for the majority of the issues and would be rather careful about buying very many stocks.

J. S. Bache & Company—We suggest that profits be taken in those speculative commitments assumed during the past week, with a view toward repurchasing stocks at lower levels.

WALL STREET MIRROR

Another extremely quiet two-hour session can be expected today. The market is in absolute control of the professional element, with the public doing little or nothing. Furthermore, the stocks held by the public are not those which are advancing now. It is not considered likely that a big broad market will be seen for some time. Traders look for highly selective trading sessions with the meritorious issues furnishing the bulk of the trading.

A short interest is locked up in Crossley Radio, and almost any sort of favorable news could furnish a sensational advance in this issue.

Columbia Graphophone continues to give a good account of itself marketwise. The very best sort of buying is still seen in this issue.

Stay long on Bethlehem Steel, a further advance in this issue is close at hand. Stay long of Alcohol stocks.

WALL STREET GOSSIP

Expressions of market opinion in the Wall Street district, after the close, continued bullish, but it was the general belief that the demand for stocks is not yet broad enough to maintain advances that occur in the course of each day in the general list. As many of the extreme high prices are made on professional buying it is natural to expect that the professionals will close out their contracts before the end of the day, and so far, action of this character caused a weak tone at the close, after displays of strength in the period intervening after the opening. Accumulation is evident in many stocks and groups, and was reflected in the manner in which a number of issues, including American Telephone, United States Steel, Bethlehem Steel and Pan-American "B" retained good gains even after late reactions.

The oil stocks continued favored by one of the most important financial groups, most interesting being attached in those circles to Pan-American "B" and Atlantic Refining. There was also vigorous buying at times yesterday in Houston Oil, which, according to the Street report, had a substantial advance in prospect. The statement of Superior Oil earnings for 1928, according to interests active in the stock, does not reflect recent conditions, as the new interests have been conducting a policy of expansion, which is adding largely to its net income. They authorize the statement that the report for the first quarter of this year will show a consolidated net profit after all charges and reserves as against a net loss of $374,914 in the first quarter of 1928. Production is now running in the volume of 18,000 barrels a day, compared with 4,000 barrels in the first quarter last year.

Many specialties are expected to be active and strong with continued accumulation in today's trading. There were many incidents in the trading in Corn Products yesterday that foreshadow a new bull campaign in that stock.

Some of the copper stocks continue in supply because of liquidation of holdings that had been acquired when Anaconda was heavily traded in above 170. It is insisted by some that a large amount of stock remains to be distributed that may prevent that issue from joining to a substantial extent in any improvement in the general list.

Whitney Letter

(Branson, Brown & Co., Ltd.)

NEW YORK, April 20.—Whitney, of the Wall Street Financial Bureau, says today. The reason for the renewed buying recommendation in New Haven is found in current earnings, which are at the rate of $11 a share, and the gradual improvement in this figure, which indicates approximately $19 for this year, which will find reflection in an increase in the dividend to a $6 basis. A rail issue paying $6 and earning $19 will stabilize at close to $120.

The reason for the renewed buying recommendation in Erie is somewhat similar. Last year Erie earned approximately $5 a share. In the first quarter of this year, surplus after charges had amounted to $2,142,839, compared with $361,771 in the corresponding quarter of the year, which produced approximately $5 for the common stock. Montgomery Ward has established a new high since the March break. If not purchased on earlier recommendations, it is a purchase now on any dip below 125. American Telephone and Telegraph is at a new record, but still some 15-20 points away from the price at which even part profits should be accepted. Missouri Pacific earnings of better than $10 a share last year will be materially exceeded this year, consequently in the 80's the stock is cheap.

In the oil group, concentrate on Standard Oil of New Jersey, Standard Oil of New York, Standard Oil of California and Union Oil of California as the soundest of the oil issues. Continue the purchase of Consolidated Gas while obtainable below 107. Mino preferred while available below 50, and of Interboro below 35. Would begin to cash in profits to the extent of 50% of holdings in Bethlehem Steel at approximately 120.

WHEAT MARKET IS QUITE FIRM

LATE DROP AT WINNIPEG CAUSED BY CHICAGO'S EXTREME WEAKNESS

Locals the Chief Buyers—Spreads About Unchanged—Little Doing in Coarse Grains

(Branson, Brown & Co., Ltd.)

WINNIPEG, April 20.—The local wheat market was quite firm today with prices mostly 1-4 to 1-2 cent over previous close, but weakened late, due to the extreme weakness in Chicago. Winnipeg May continued to gain on Chicago May; at one time today the premium widened out to about 8 cents. Local trade was not large, but there appeared to be a more friendly feeling towards wheat, and locals were the chief buyers. There was very little outside buying and export sales overnight were very small. Chicago sold some May wheat, while the Pool continued to sell October. There was just a moderate demand for cash wheat, and several shippers were just looking on today. Offerings were not at all heavy. Spreads were unchanged, rains were fairly general over the Winter wheat belt, being very heavy in some sections. There was also rains and snow in Southern Alberta, but seeding is now fairly general in the three Prairie Provinces.

There is apparently sufficient moisture in all areas of the West to start germination, but moisture is short and plentiful precipitation will be needed a little later.

Coarse grains. Outside of a little business in oats, which was said to be for export, there was little doing in the coarse grains, the demand for barley and rye being extremely dull. There was not much pressure on oats or barley, but long lines of rye were thrown overboard today by tired holders.

Flax also lost ground in sympathy with the general weakness.

The Fundamentals in Judging the Worth of Oil Stock

Ask Yourself The Following Questions Before Buying:

1. What Acreage Does the Company, Whose Stock You are Considering, Hold?

ANSWER: Turner-Wright Petroleums, Limited, hold 1,320 acres in the northern end of Turner Valley. This acreage is located between the producing wells and large holdings of the Imperial Oil Company. The company also holds 120 acres in the Wainwright field.

2. Have Competent Geologists Passed on Acreage as Being on Structure that Warrants the Opinion that Oil May be Obtained in Commercial Quantities?

ANSWER: Professor J. J. Allen, geologist, said: "The Turner-Wright Petroleums, Limited, drilling site is a complete closed dome sitting right over the major structure. It shows plenty of room for real accumulation of oil. It is reasonable to expect very big production at from 4,300 to 5,000 feet, and warrants one test hole to that depth."

Major C. C. Richards, geologist, was retained by the late Chief Justice Hunter to give his opinion on the Turner-Wright Petroleums, Limited, holding. He said: "In my opinion this property shows one of the finest structures I have ever seen in my life."

A. W. Baxter, British Government geologist, states: "The proposed drilling site of the Turner-Wright Petroleums, Limited, is a complete, closed anti-cline . . . the most perfect anti-cline in Turner Valley."

F. H. Hutton, geologist, and director of the Turner-Wright Petroleums, Limited, says: "I have been in the Turner Valley for eighteen years . . . since 1911. I have studied the forms and conditions. In my opinion, the Turner-Wright holdings are second to none in the whole district of the Turner Valley. It shows a complete closed structure. I have personally made fifty-two test holes on this drilling site, and they show that the structure work hidden from surface was still on the true dip. In my opinion, this property has greater prospects than any holdings in the Turner Valley district. I was there on August 29, 1924, when Royalite No. 4, the first well in the Turner Valley, blew in. I had the opportunity of a wide selection of properties in the Turner Valley. In selecting and retaining the Turner-Wright Petroleums, Limited, holdings, I believe I secured what will prove to be the finest producing property in that territory."

3. Are the Officers and Directors of the Company Worthy of Your Confidence?

ANSWER: The Officers and Directors of Turner-Wright Petroleums, Limited, are of unquestionable integrity, and enjoy a reputation for aggressiveness and ability. The Company is fortunate in having, in two of its Directors, men who have been associated with the successful development of Turner Valley, and are familiar with conditions in that district.

4. What is the Financial Structure of the Company?

ANSWER: Turner-Wright Petroleums, Limited, is capitalized at 860,000 shares no par value. The vendors were paid 350,000 shares for the company's holdings. 120,000 shares are held in the treasury. 300,000 shares are being issued for development purposes, as follows: 100,000 shares at $1.00, 100,000 shares at $1.25, 100,000 shares at $2.00. Not one share has been allocated, or will be paid for promotion.

5. What is the Potential Value of the Stock you Propose to Buy?

ANSWER: The potential value of Turner-Wright Petroleums, Limited, is purely speculative. It is reasonable to believe that there will be a tremendous increase in the value of this stock when a well is brought in. The large acreage in the company's holdings . . . larger than the entire famous Signal Hill District in California . . . would justify one of the highest-priced stocks in the Turner Valley field.

6. What Are the Plans for Development?

ANSWER: The Directors of Turner-Wright Petroleums, Limited, are pledged to an immediate and active programme of development.

A FINE INVESTMENT

AS A GREENHOUSE SITE, truck garden, bulb and seed, or general farm, this property, containing 15 acres, is unique, and as an investment it is unquestionable, if Victoria has any future at all. Situated well inside the 3½-mile circle, just at the terminus of the Mount Tolmie car, fronting on Shelbourne Street. Land now worked by Chinamen, who do not as a rule monkey with poor land. To close the estate this property, which was never offered for less than $12,500 during the late owner's lifetime, is now for sale at $4,250. There is nothing to be had near this figure in the neighborhood. You have the best of land, tile-drained, street paving, water and light, cheap transportation, to the midst of suburban homes of the best sort. What offers better inducements?

ARCTIC COPPER IS LONG KNOWN

EARLY EXPLORERS NAMED RIVER AFTER DISCOVERIES

Indians and Eskimos Utilized the Red Metal Which They Found

Referring to the vast copper bodies that are reported in the vicinity of the Arctic Ocean, in Northern Canada, a writer in The Financial Post gives the following information, gleaned from the early explorers, who located the copper bodies, which have, with the pushing of the mineral operations so much farther north of late, brought these into prominence.

Northwest from Churchill 900 miles, is the centre of the copper region of the Arctic, according to the writer. This country is of unknown extent, is watered by the Coppermine River and includes a number of islands in Bathurst Inlet and in Melville Sound. It lies, in part, within the Northern Prairie region of Canada, formerly called the Barren Grounds.

Writing in 1714, Jeremie recorded: "The Dogrib Indians have in their country a mine of red copper so abundant and so pure that without putting it through the forge they pound it between two stones and make anything they wish of it."

From its foundation in the seventeenth century, Indians and Eskimos came down to Churchill with pieces of pure copper strung on necklaces or beaten into crude cooking utensils or weapons. To this day the world does not know the exact location of their mines. The Indians said it was at a "Far-Away-Metal-River" that emptied into the icy ocean. Hearne in 1772 thought he found it, its richnesses enveloped in a fall of rock occasioned by an earthquake or some other convulsion of nature. A parliamentary committee sitting in London in 1746 elicited considerable information about the copper resources of the Arctic. Perhaps the most significant evidence was that of Christopher Bannister, who had been armorer and gunsmith for the Hudson's Bay Company on the bay for twenty-two years, and knew from his occupation what he was talking about. The minutes read: "That he had seen copper frequently brought down by the Northern Indians, a piece of which he produced to your committee, and said that he had seen great quantities of it there."

FRANKLIN'S REFERENCE

Franklin in 1821 describes the Copper Mountains where he and his party found specimens of pure copper scattered among the stones of the valleys. Dr. Richardson, Franklin's naturalist, picked up plates of native copper, masses of pistacite containing native copper, trap rock with associated native copper and iron-shot copper, green and of greenish-grey prehnite in trap with disseminated native copper. He also found some large tabular fragments, evidently portions of a vein consisting of prehnite associated with calcareous spar and native copper. The Indians reported to him that they had found copper in every part of the range for forty miles to the Northwest.

In this same year Franklin and Richardson found trap rock of the copper-bearing series eastward along the Arctic Coast from the mouth of Coppermine River for nearly 200 miles. In 1826 Richardson found the same formation westward for over 200 miles. He described it as similar to the copper-bearing rocks of Lake Superior, and the conditions under which it occurred as similar to conditions at Keekwenaw Point, on the south shore of Lake Superior.

LATE DISCOVERIES

Tyrrell in 1903 found the same formation along the north shores of Doorbaunt Lake and River south of the Northern Prairies or Barren Grounds.

David Hanbury, in 1902, mentions that while ascending the Coppermine River to Great Bear Lake one of his men was tripped up by a chunk of native copper on the shore, weighing twelve pounds. In 1912 he discovered considerable copper on the islands in Bathurst Inlet and in Melville Sound, notably Barry Island, northeast of the mouth of the Coppermine River. There the underlying basalt dips west at an angle of about twenty-five degrees, and it is in this rock that the native copper occurs.

Hanbury says: "The copper is plentiful, and on a neighboring island, Kunnuyuk, a mass of copper was found so large that a man could hardly lift it. There also copper is found in the tideway. The whole of the lower levels on Barry Island are covered with debris from the basalt, and where the rock has been disintegrated by weathering, copper has fallen out so that flakes of the metal may be found along the seashore. Green patches indicate that nuggets or flakes of copper have recently fallen out from their matrix. The copper-bearing rock also contains crystalline quartz forming amethystine veins."

METAL ABOUNDS

On all the islands visited in Bathurst Inlet, Hanbury found copper. On the shore of one was a mass of the metal five feet in length and three inches thick protruding from the rocks under the water.

Stefansson describes rich deposits north of Dismal Lake, and richer still in the mountains northeast of Prince Albert Sound, on Victoria Land.

Apparently this copper-bearing area of the Arctic is infinitely more extensive than the Lake Superior copper area as so far discovered. The former is far from being inaccessible. Prince Albert Sound has been navigated by ocean-going ships from Bering Sea. The Arctic Coast bordering Bathurst Inlet is roughly 900 miles from Churchill and it is well known that the Northern Churchill region presents no very great difficulties for railroad construction. The Mackenzie is navigable from its mouth and a railway from there along the Arctic Coast is considered feasible.

It were strange indeed if, in the unprecedented mineral development of this decade, the copper veins of the Arctic, known to be rich for over 200 years, remain undeveloped. It is more than possible that the Hudson Bay Railway will be the main artery of a number of branches feeding into the great mineral belt to the north.

"Don't you and your husband patch up your quarrels?" asked the visitor.

"Dear me, no!" replied Mrs. Newrich. "We can always afford to have new ones."

LEPER CURED ON BENTINCK ISLAND HERE

Lum Mah Hing Leaves for China on President McKinley After Nine Years' Chaulmoogra Treatment

Smiling and happy after nine years' isolation upon a small island with only a few other sufferers for company, Lum Mah Hing, ex-leper, walked up the gangplank of the American Mail liner President McKinley yesterday afternoon, a free man, bound for China.

Hing has been at the lazaretto for lepers on Bentinck Island, near William Head quarantine station, since 1920, when he was discovered working on a farm in Saanich and suffering from leprosy. He responded to constant treatments of chaulmoogra oil, and when released yesterday had been cured of the terrible malady.

The Chinese waved fond farewells to those on the wharf as the liner pulled out at 6 o'clock in the evening. He turned his face to China, doubtless with kind thoughts for his eleven fellow sufferers left on the lonely island.

The McKinley departed at 6 o'clock in the evening with forty-eight first class and 125 third class passengers, 4,422 bags of mail and 6,200 tons of flour, canned milk, machinery and automobiles. Three tons of seaweed was loaded here.

Before the liner sailed, Mr. C. R. Nelson, chief steward, escorted one of the cooks ashore with a three-tier cake, standing over two feet high and decorated with the house flag of the line. It was a "courtesy cake" for the President Grant, due here Monday afternoon.

Those on board included Mr. I. B Cohen, connected with the New York Merchandising Company, bound for Yokohama; Mr. Charles Craig, General Electric official, en route to Yokohama with Mrs. Craig; Mr. Alexander Collon, associated with the Neuss Hesslein Company, of New York, en route to Manila; Mr James F Donnelly, Grand Rapids importer, for Shanghai; Mr Morgan J. Davis, Standard Oil official, en route to China with Mrs. Davis and Morgan, Jr.; Dr. and Mrs. W. R. Megner, bound for Manila; Mr. William R. Herod, International Electric Company official, en route to Yokohama; Mr. Carl Hallquist, with the General Electric Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, en route to Yokohama; Mr Albert F. Hughes, Seattle, of the Electric Products Company, to disbark at Yokohama; Mr. Earl S. Hanna, also of the Electrical Products Company, Seattle, accompanying Mr. Hughes to Yokohama; Mrs. Grace Jurgensen, en route to Shanghai to join her husband, who is connected with the Inness & Riddle, China, Limited; Mr O. E. Linquist, with the International Harvester Company, Chicago, en route to Manila, and Miss Matilda H. London, missionary, bound for Yokohama, for the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.

Others included Mr. Frank Lindquist, of Cleveland, Ohio, en route to Yokohama for the General Electric Company, Cleveland; Mr. D T Manget, with Mrs. Manget and son, Mr. Dan Manget, and the Misses Catherine and Lucile, of Newman, Georgia, combining a business trip with a pleasure trip to Shanghai and other points in the Orient; Mr and Mrs. Mantel and daughter, of New York, passengers for Shanghai; Miss Louise C. May, New York City, missionary, en route to China; Mr J. A. Manrique, of the Neuss-Hesslein Co., Inc., New York City, with Mrs Manrique, en route to Manila; Mr. Meade McCamey, representative of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, en route to Shanghai on business; Mr. Shoichi Ono, New York City, connected with Haruta & Company, of New York, en route to Yokohama; Mr Otto S. Pruessman, vice-president of the International General Electric Company, Inc., of New York City, with Mrs. Pruessman, en route to Yokohama; Mr. David Ritchie, of London, England, a passenger for Kobe; Mr. Louis C. Winternheimer, of Chicago, connected with the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, en route to Manila with Mrs. Winternheimer; Mrs. David Whitcomb, of Los Angeles, a passenger for Shanghai, and Mr. O. W. Yates, connected with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, en route to Shanghai.

LORD WILLINGDON TO OPEN TUNNEL

Structure Will Connect North Vancouver With Transcontinental Railway Lines

VANCOUVER, April 20.—Official opening of the new tunnel at North Vancouver connecting the North Shore with transcontinental lines by way of the harbor terminal system, will take place officially on Wednesday of next week. Lord Willingdon, Governor-General of Canada, will officiate at the ceremonies, according to an announcement by the Harbor Commission.

At 2:30 p.m. a special train will pull out from the Canadian Pacific Railway Depot at Vancouver, carrying the Governor-General, his staff and men prominent in railway, civic and business circles. It will proceed over the Second Narrows Bridge, over the new terminal system on the North Shore and will be the first train to pass through the tunnel, which has been completed at a cost approaching $250,000. The new tunnel opens rail connection with industrial areas facing on the port west of Lonsdale Avenue.

ESTEVAN HELD FOR PIPE WORK

FIREMEN COMPLAIN THAT THREE-INCH STEAM CARRIER ENDANGERS LIFE ABOARD

Twelve of Crew Aver That Temperature of 120 Degrees Also Prevents Sleep

The mystery surrounding the failure of the Canadian Government steamship Estevan to sail from Yarrows on Monday was cleared up yesterday, when it was learned that the vessel is being held by instructions from Ottawa revolving around a steam pipe passing through the firemen's quarters.

For some time the pipe has been a sore point with twelve firemen, who are housed in what is known as the "glory hole." It carries steam to the forward winches at a pressure of ninety pounds and in the Summer brings the temperature of the men's quarters up to 120 degrees, making sleep extremely difficult.

At a cost of $350 the three-inch pipe was taken out and tested last week when Yarrows overhauled the Estevan. Apparently the pipe was found sound, for it was put back with no changes.

The complaint of the firemen is that the pipe is liable to burst should the vessel strike in the shallow waters which she navigates in lighthouse and buoy work around Vancouver Island. They also contend that the pipe should be removed to better their sleeping conditions.

Through Mr. Aubrey H. C. Jones, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Civil Servants, the firemen took up the matter with the national secretary at Ottawa, with the result that the Estevan is now awaiting instructions from Ottawa to have the offending pipe rerouted.

Percy Barnes Here

Percy Barnes, pilot of the Seattle air mail plane Zephyr, arrived here shortly after 6 o'clock last evening with mail for the Empress of Asia. He will remain in the city until Monday afternoon for the President Grant's air mail.

The time used is Pacific Standard for the 120th Meridian west. It is counted from 0 to 24 hours, from midnight to midnight. The figures for height serve to distinguish high water from low water. Where blanks occur in the table, the tide rises or falls continuously during two successive tidal periods without turning.

The height is in feet and tenths of a foot, measured from the average level of low water.

To find the depth of water on the sill of the Esquimalt drydock at any tide, add 18.0 feet to the height of high water as given above.

To find the depth of water on the sill of the Songhees drydock add 30 feet to the height of high water as above given.

CHOWN CHURCH CHOIR TO ASSIST

This morning the pulpit of Metropolitan Church will be occupied by Rev. O M. Sanford, minister of Chown Church, Vancouver, and the music will be provided by the choir of that church, which competed in the Victoria Musical Festival.

This choir is one of the finest in Vancouver and will render two anthems, and also offer a solo by one of the members. The leader of the choir is Mr H M Drost, a barrister of Vancouver.

The first time he saw a kangaroo, a motorist's little son exclaimed "Oh, look, daddy, he's got a rumble seat."

LOCAL PIONEER DIES IN CHINA

LATE MR. MAR CHAN HAD BEEN RESIDENT OF VICTORIA FOR FIFTY-FOUR YEARS

Agent for Blue Funnel Line From 1891 and Canadian National From 1919

Word has been received that Mr. Mar Chan, the last of Victoria's pioneer Chinese, died at Shanghai on April 17, at the age of eighty-one.

He is survived by two sons, Mr Mar Quong, of Shanghai, and Mr. Mar Leung, manager of the firm of Quon On & Company, and a member of the staff of the Royal Bank here.

Coming to Victoria in 1875, Mr Chan was for some years engaged in railway construction work in various parts of Canada. Later on he represented steamship companies plying between British Columbia and Alaska. In 1891 he was appointed Chinese agent for the Blue Funnel Line, and agent for the Canadian National Railways in 1919.

Mr Chan was one of the founders of the local Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association. In 1922 he was instrumental in raising $250,000 for erection of the Toy San High School at Canton. The school was built in 1924 as the largest educational institute in the Province of Canton.

Mr. Chan was well known not only the province but in Chinese circles throughout the Dominion. He was the first chairman of the Oriental School here, and a past president of the Ming Young Society. His efforts were continuously directed toward the betterment of educational conditions among his people resident in the city.

He left here last August with the intention of building a home at Shanghai, but did not realize the fruits of his labors. Local Chinese societies are planning to hold services in his memory, and the Toy San School is to erect a tablet to the benefator

MATSON CONTRACT IS TO BE LET SOON

Two $8,000,000 Liners Will Fly Between San Francisco and Australia

SAN FRANCISCO, April 20.—Awarding of the contract for the building of two passenger liners for the Australian service of the Matson Navigation Company is expected to be made within the next few days, it was learned at the local offices of the company

William P. Roth, president of the company, returned to San Francisco from Honolulu Wednesday on the Malolo, and his return is expected to have the effect of rushing the award.

The bid of the Fore River plant of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation was the lowest submitted, but it was close to $1,500,000 higher than the company estimate. It is understood that the Matson Line made certain changes and alterations in the original plans that will permit the awarding of the contract within a few days. The two liners will cost close to $8,000,000 each.

NORAH TO SAIL

On her first West Coast voyage in the regular service of the British Columbia Coast Steamship Service, the new Princess Norah is to leave the harbor at 11 o'clock this evening for Port Alice and way ports with passengers and freight. She will return in ten days' time

The popular Princess Maquinna will also leave Victoria every Wednesday for Esperanza Inlet and way points between June 26 and August 28. Up to June 26 she will leave here on the 1st, 11th and 21st day of each month as usual.

The Norah's schedule calls for departure from here on May 1, 11, 21, and June 1, 11, 21, 29. While at Vancouver this week she was visited by many of the citizens.

FISHERMEN HAVE HARROWING TIME

Seine Vessel Manhatten Tossed About for Three Days With Propeller Gone

LONG BEACH, April 20.—While Captain George Hillier and Mr. Jack Camp were making a passage from Ucluelet to Coal Harbor recently, on the seine vessel Manhatten, they had a narrow escape from being swamped in a heavy sea

"We left Ucluelet on a Monday morning," said Captain Hillier, in describing the voyage. "The wind was fair and we expected a good passage. When we were off the rajo reef, which is a long reef jutting off from the outer end of Nootka Island for some five miles, and one of the most treacherous reefs on the West Coast, we noticed the sudden racing of the engine, which warned us that we had lost our propeller. The lead showed a depth of thirty-five fathoms. Camp put the hook down and we hung on until daylight. In the morning an easterly breeze sprung up, which was a fair wind to take us into Kyuquot.

"We heaved the anchor, spread our small amount of canvas and made an attempt to reach there, as this appeared our only hope of safety. Before we reached Kyuquot the wind veered to the westward, which prevented us from reaching our haven of safety. We were forced to again anchor and await either a more favorable wind or the small chance of being sighted and towed in. While we were waiting we could see that a gale was coming and that our position was becoming a very uncomfortable one. Night was coming and what could we do?

"We talked it over and finally I decided to make an attempt to reach shore and secure assistance, while Camp courageously volunteered to stay with the boat. Equipped with water and food in case of accidents, we lowered the lifeboat. I had no sooner pushed away when a big sea struck the boat. It capsized and was smashed almost immediately. Camp threw me a line which I grasped and managed to get back to the Manhatten.

"Without a lifeboat our situation was a grave one. With a storm brewing and a reef-bound lee shore, we could do nothing but hang on and hope. There we waited, battened down, helpless with the big seas breaking over us. The waves washed our decks for two days and two nights, but our anchor held. The third day the sky cleared and the wind veered to the nor'west. We took up the anchor and steered a course for Esperanza and possible shelter. Before reaching there we were picked up by the Western Chief, Captain Richard Nelson, who towed us into Hecate for repairs. After beaching our boat we were surprised to find that we had not only lost our propeller but also part of the tail-shaft."

"Poverty is a blessing in disguise," said the sage.

"Well," replied the fool, "the disguise is certainly effective."

AIRPLANE AIDS TWO TRAVELERS

MR. AND MRS. J. TANAKA ARRIVE FROM VANCOUVER IN TIME FOR THE ASIA

Catch Plane at Jericho Beach After Canceling Passage, Before Ship Sails

Demonstrating the usefulness of the airplane in catching steamers at the last minute, Mr. J. Tanaka and his wife arrived here from Jericho Beach, Vancouver, at 7:30 o'clock last evening, just half an hour before the Empress of Asia sailed for ports of Japan and Cinha.

Mr. Tanaka canceled his passage on the liner before she sailed from Vancouver for Victoria at noon, but changed his mind again, hiring an airplane and flying to the city. It was not possible to take along any trunks, so the couple arrived here "traveling light."

The Asia's passenger list of 451 was made up of sixty-eight first class, sixty-six second, twenty-two third and 295 steerage. Her mail consignment consisted of 1,065 bags, 173 of which were loaded here.

Among those on board was Mr. E. M. B. Ingram, O.B.E.; Dr Charles C. Roosa, Mr. G. Sapojnikoff, Mr. J. H. P. Wheeler Kither, Rev. Waters Dewees Roberts, Mr. L. Pechnikoff, Rev. Sr. Marguerite Marie, Mr. Aurelio Lasarte, Mr. T. Kobayashi, Mrs. L. L. Iballo, Rev. Srs. S. Helene, Mr. Marcos H. Aldea, Rev. Srs. Joseph de la Sainte Famille, Rev. Srs. Marie Celina, Mrs. M. Osgood Whitcomb, Mr. Walter Seigfried, Mr. Sven Lagerberg, Mr. M. Alvarez and Mrs. M. DuH. Clagett.

Others include Mrs. Frank Sugden, wife of an official of the Peking-Mukden Railway; Mr. W. O. Barney, of the Asiatic Trading Corporation, Calcutta; Mr. Lindsay Hoben, Milwaukee newspaper man, making a tour of the world; Mr. Paul Viau, on a business trip to Japan and Australia, and Mrs. W. S. Fallis, wife of the general manager of the Sherwin-Williams Paint Company.

COPEMAN PASSES UP TO VANCOUVER

British Freighter Left Antwerp on March 11 With 25,000 Cases Aboard

The British steamer Copeman, which left Antwerp on March 11 last year, passed up to Vancouver for drydocking at 9:19 o'clock yesterday morning, according to Federal pilots.

According to reports received here, the Copeman originally left Holland loaded with 25,000 cases of liquor for the Atlantic seaboard. Later on she proceeded to the Mexican Coast, where she remained for the best part of a year.

She is a steel steamer of 1,743 gross tons register, built at Glasgow in 1899. Launched as the Avontown, she later became the Citrina and finally the Copeman.

FISHING POOR

TOFINO, April 20.—Fishing has been almost completely at a standstill during the past week, owing to continuous storms on the coast. One fisherman reports having been three weeks out from Ketchikan, Alaska, with a catch of only ten salmon.

Fire Prevention and Control in City Is Story of Romance and Devotion

The romance of fire-fighting organizations in Victoria is among the most interesting features of the early history of the city. As was the case in most Canadian towns in the early years of the last half of the nineteenth century the first organization was composed of volunteer members. Though the department had a regularly accepted constitution, and its discipline was rigidly enforced, its members served for the public good. Their voluntary service included their individual purchase of the prescribed uniform, though, in the acquisition of fire-fighting apparatus and fire hall properties they were liberally supported by citizen donations.

EARLY REGULATIONS

The Victoria Fire Department was organized under and enjoyed certain authority and privileges by virtue of legislative enactments passed first in 1861, subsequently in 1864 and amendments to these Acts passed in 1873. It functioned independently of the municipal council and was, for many years, a law unto itself. Its actual business transactions were carried out by a board of delegates elected by the members of the several companies and the fire chiefs and foremen of companies were elected, at first, in the same manner. Its volunteer membership consisted of strong, muscular and active young men of the city and included many of the business men and most prominent citizens.

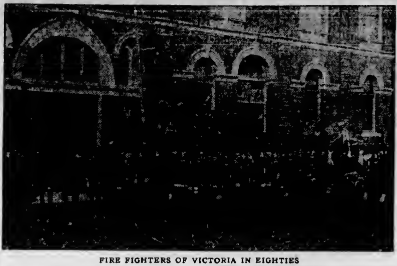
Of those who were at various periods chiefs of the department only three remain alive, Mr. H. E. Levy, Mr. Joseph Wrigglesworth and Mr. Thomas Deasy. Of the entire first enlistments not more than a dozen are known to remain until today. Though he had served as chief of the volunteer companies, Mr. Thomas Deasy was the first paid chief of the department, and held his office under civic regulations from 1887 until 1901, being followed in office by Mr. Thomas Watson, who, in turn, was superseded by Mr. T. Davis.

The entire department was divided into three companies, a hook and ladder company and companies 1 and 2. Each company enrolled sixty members. After the purchase of the first two steam fire engines, the water companies were designated after their machines and called the "Deluge" and "Tiger" companies.

The first fire hall was situated on Bastion Street on the south side, between Langley and Wharf Streets, immediately in the rear of the surgery of the late Hon. Dr. J. S. Helmcken. It was a two-story building, the hook and ladder truck being kept on the ground floor. The building was moved bodily in 1861 to Government Street, between Fort and Broughton, on the west side.

As there were no telephones or fire alarm systems in those days, the practice was for whomsoever was first to see or hear of a fire to run to the hall, ring the bell and await the arrival of a sufficient number of the volunteers to man the equipment. A fine of fifty cents was imposed on every member who failed to put in an appearance at every fire.

The engines of these historic dates were hand pumping machines. The six-inch hose was made of solid leather, riveted with brass fastenings. After being mauled around in the mud incidental to a fire fight this hose always had to be washed clean and soaked in oil from end to end. A permanent steward was employed at the fire hall to perform this and other regulation tasks. His name goes down in history as Philip J. Hall. He was a member of No. 2 company, of which Mr. H. E. Levy was foreman in 1864. The delegates from his company were Messrs. S. L. Kelly, S. Duck, C. Gowen and Frank Sylvester, father of the present-day firm of Sylvester Bros.



FIRE FIGHTERS OF VICTORIA IN EIGHTIES

Each of the fire-fighting companies had its slogan. The three were: "We strive to save," "Our aim the public good," "Willing hearts and hands."

The uniform consisted of black trousers, red shirts, black caps with straight peaks or, optionally, helmets. Names and numbers on belts and helmets designated companies. As may be presumed, a mrashaled force of uniformed first citizens made an imposing picture. The fire department patronized public functions and took part in many celebrations. Their own fete day was May 1, on which occasions the whole entourage turned out with hose reels, fire engines and every available piece of transportable equipment. They picnicked, heard speeches, held contests and made the day their gala function.

FIRST DOMINION ENSIGN

The May Day date for this celebration was sustained until 1871 when, for reasons now to appear, the date was changed to July 1. On that date the fire companies paraded the streets according to prearranged programme and marched to the residence of Dr. I. W. Powell, on Douglas Street. Here a large company of citizens had assembled to witness the presentation by Dr Powell of a Dominion of Canada flag, which Dr. Powell had brought with him from his visit to Ottawa and Eastern cities. This is said to have been the first Dominion ensign ever exhibited in Victoria. The fire department had its own band and rendered "The Red, White and Blue," and Chief Engineer Duck responded feelingly on behalf of the department.

The first important addition to fire-fighting apparatus was made in 1888, when two steam fire engines were purchased by the volunteers. The Legislature provided for the election of a permanent chief, and the election was by ballot of the property owners of the city, and no longer by the members of volunteer companies.

The first election under these provisions took place on December 8, 1887. There were three candidates in the field—Deasy, Phillips and Rudge. Mr. Deasy distanced his competitors, polling 130 more votes than both his competitors mustered. It was under the aegis of his chieftainship that the first wheeled chemical engine was procured.

Two small steam fire engines were purchased in the early 70's—one, a Merryweather, from England, and the other a Tiger, of American manufacture. They were christened respectively the "Deluge" and the "Tiger."

DELUGE COMPANY

The "Deluge" company established a fire hall on Yates Street, next door east of Alhambra corner on Government Street. A little later this fire hall was removed to Douglas Street in premises where the Brunswick Block is now undergoing remodeling. Then the firemen, still operating under the charter of legislative enactments, bought a property on Yates Street, two doors from the corner of Broad Street, next door to where Burt's butcher shop and a Greek fruit store are now installed. Here the fire hall remained until the department was taken over by the city.

The "Tiger" company on the other hand, had been installed at Johnson Street, between Government and Broad Streets, where they remained until they erected a two story building extending from Pandora Avenue to Cormorant Street. This building had an entrance on each of these streets and was almost directly opposite the present city fire hall premises.

The water supply for fire fighting purposes was at first stored in cisterns sunk at strategic points in the downtown section of the city. There were eight of these cisterns and each tank capable of holding eight or ten thousand gallons. The principal cisterns were at the corner of Johnson and Government Streets, corner of Store and Johnson Streets, and corner of Government and Yates Streets.

There were numerous wells in the city limits at that time and the firemen did not hesitate to drop their suction into these when utilitarian purposes could be served. Mainly, however, the water supply was drawn from Spring Ridge. A large pond existed in that locality called Harris' Pond, so named after the city's first mayor. The water was led from this pond to a huge reservoir sunk on Spring Ridge, from where it was delivered through a single six and eight-inch wooden pipe to the various cisterns in the lower city.

Those were the Edenic days when water for culinary and drinking purposes was retailed throughout the city delivered from carts and barrels at ten cents per bucket.

Two or three high hydrants delivered the water to carts from which it was spilled into the cisterns excepting in the case of one or two to which pipelines led direct. In the case of the Store Street cistern water was frequently pumped from the harbor in order to keep the reservoir full.

STRIKES "GOLD"

An amusing story is told by one of the pioneer firemen respecting the excavations for a tank cistern on Blanshard Street. The contractor excavator was one Willis Bond, a successful colored contractor who came to Victoria during the American wars. After the huge "hole" had been sunk to a depth of several feet, some practical joker planted brass filings in one corner of the hole. Workmen found the glittering treasure next morning. The find was reported to the "Boss." Undoubtedly he had struck a pocket of alluvial gold. He had all the clay that had been excavated from the cistern moved in carts to his own property a little farther along Blanshard Street. It cost him some money to transport the mass. What happened can be readily imagined.

As may be expected, there was great rivalry between the "Deluge" and "Tiger" companies in their early equipment with hand and steam apparatus. They had an earlier experience with chemical fire extinguishers. The first of these brought to the city was a machine made to be carried on the back. Its first use was at the fire in the old Colonial Hotel on Government Street, to which reference already has been made in these articles.

Once when a fire alarm rang in midwinter there was two feet of snow on the ground. To get the engines to the tanks was a task even for horsedrawn conveyances. They paid five dollars to the first team on the ground when an alarm sounded and a similar amount to the team pulling the second engine. On this occasion the "Deluge" arrived first at the cistern on the corner of Yates and Government to suppress a fire in the Court House Square section of the city. The "Tiger" hose reel arrived next. "Deluge" firemen appropriated the "Tiger" hose and began to shoot a stream of water toward the scene of the fire. Soon the "Tiger" engine arrived and discovered the facts of the case. In an endeavor to recover their own hose a free fight between the firemen ensued, during which pumping water on the fire was utterly forgotten. Only the arrival of the "Deluge" hose reel terminated the fisticuffs, and the fire soon was extinguished.

WANTED COMPENSATION

At the same fire a commercial traveler, unacquainted with the ways of the embryo city, strolled out of his hotel to witness the excitement of the fire. He fared near the open cistern into which the suction hoses of the "Deluge" and "Tiger" had been dropped. As there were no lights there he did not discern the cavern that yawned beneath his feet and walked straight into it. He was fished out with a fireman's hook and landed safely on top of the earth. Next day, having learned of the constitution of the fire department and thet it had a committee of delegates empowered to deal with complaints, he sent a communication demanding $30 for the ruin of his clothes.

The delegates met in emergency meeting to deal with this demand. It promptly was moved, seconded and unanimously carried "That the letter be filed and the secretary instructed to write the claimant to thet effect and request him politely to go to ——." The letter was duly sent, the minute being so recorded on the ancient records of the Fire Department. The claimant was not heard from again. Perhaps he went where he was requested to go.

Fire alarms under the ancient regime were sounded on the bells of the various fire halls. The city had been zoned for fire purposes into six wards in order to sustain a code of bell-taps which would indicate in which ward the fire occurred, a sort of predecessor to the present Gamewell system now thoroughly installed.

The volunteer system was not abandoned until 1887, in which year the volunteer was changed to the call system. The force thereafter consisted, for a time, of four permanent men, including the chief and assistant chief and eighteen call men. The chief was elected every second year and his assistant likewise. The salary of chief, though he was not obliged to put in all his time in fire department employ, was $60 per month, that of assistant chief, likewise footloose, was $25 per month. As related above Mr. Thomas Deasy was elected the first chief under this arrangement.

THE BELLS

The old bells which rang out the rude alarms during so many years of the volunteer regime were disposed of when the fire department became a branch of the civic institutions. The first bell, the property, originally, of the Union Hook & Ladder Company, was disposed of to St Matthias' Church in the Foul Bay precinct. It summons many worshippers to Sabbath devotions, not one of whom dreams that once it sounded shrill warnings to people to escape the pursuing flames.

The "Deluge" fire-hall bell passed into the hands of a church in Oak Bay municipality, where it performs similar functions. The "Tiger" bell hangs on the limbs of a tree at the tourist camp on Gorge Road, where it performs no other function than to attract the curiosity of auto campers, many of whom ask in vain what it means to be so isolated.

A venerable citizen, formerly a fireman, mourns such disposition of this bell. He calls it desecration in remembrance of the holy memories which associate themselves with its history. He says it is not in its proper place. He recalls more than this. He reflects that a number of the old volunteer fire brigade lie interred in the old Quadra Street Cemetery. He moralizes on the fact that the humble headstones which marked the last resting place of all that was mortal in their useful and heartily-rendered services have been removed from the plots which once indicated their graves and are stacked in a corner at the rear of the old cemetery plot. He hesitates not to say that a memorial hall, even if of modest pretentions, should be erected on the old "burying ground" and that these forgotten tombstones should be museumed in its walls. He thinks the proper place for the old "Tiger" bell would be within such a museum.

When, in 1889, the Legislature passed an act entitling the city to administer its own fire department, the Victoria city firemen turned over all their property—excepting their firemen's charitable fund, which was divided among themselves—the civic council made the position of fire chief permanent, during competency and good behaviour, and since then the department has been a progressive unit in civic administration.

Chief Watson took office after the resignation of Chief Deasy in 1901. During the fifteen years of Chief Deasy's regime the annual fire loss in the city averaged $10,000 per annum though the cost of upkeep was $30,000 per year.

In a story of this kind there are a thousand and one incidents which might be described did space permit. In a daily newspaper like The Colonist some respect must be paid to space limitations. Yet there should be made mention of the sale of the Merryweather engine, named "John Grant," after the mayor of the time. This engine was purchased by the city in 1889 and underwent a public test of her capabilities at the corner of Yates and Douglas Streets on December 13 of that year.

Though the date was unlucky, the new machine stood up to the test and the files of the newspapers of that day state that the city officials and citizens went home feeling that a good bargain had been made. Even the neighboring city of Seattle came within the play of service rendered by the Merryweather engines and the "Deluge," already referred to.

Twenty-seven years after she entered the service of Victoria City, the John Grant was sold to an up-country lumber mill, her boilers leaking, her pumps reduced in pressure and generally understood to have served her generation to the full extent of her cost.

The old engine is forgotten, but the mayor, after whom she was named, still persists in fragrant or vagrant memories of those who knew and understood him in the flesh.

The present chief, Mr. V. W. Stewart, who has been in the service of the department for twelve years, was appointed chief in 1918 and has held that position capably ever since.

THE PRESENT SYSTEM

The present efficient organization hardly hints at the conditions of pioneer days. The Gamewell system of fire alarms has been extended. It sounds no public alarm, but warns firemen at all stations in what zone the fire has threatened. So efficient is the equipment and so capable the men that a fire hardly has a chance under existing conditions.

There are five halls distributed at strategic points throughout the city. No. 1 is on Cormorant Street, opposite City Hall; No. 2 is on Yates Street, No. 4 in Victoria West, No. 5 on Burnside Road, and No. 6 at Oak Bay. There are seventy-four men on the payroll of the department. They are kept efficient by practically daily training under instructions of the chief. There are two shifts. One goes on duty at 6 o'clock in the evening and remains until 6 o'clock nxet morning, the next shift relieves it then and fills in the space between.

So goes down into history the record of brave men whose memory—for the love of their city and hearty service to their fellow men—will remain green while there lasts the remnant of the generation whom they so gladly and so efficienty served.

The village fire department was still on the job. "Why don't you stop?" yelled the angry house owner. "The fire is all out."

"I know it is," replied the fire captain, "but there's three windows yet to break."

TROPHY IS OFFERED FOR MODEL GARDEN

Interesting Feature Should Appeal to Lovers of Garden Landscape Work

A trophy is being offered for competition for a model for a Vancouver Island home garden in the Spring Flower Show to be held at the Willows on Friday and Saturday under the direction of the Vancouver Island Horticultural Society.

This is a splendid competition which will have lots of scope for originality. Everyone has one's own ideas of what a home garden should be, but no two people think alike, so that there should be a great diversity of ideas demonstrated in these models. The models are to be quite small, being two feet six inches in length.

Last year a great deal of interest was shown by the public in these exhibits and this year, with far more entries, this class should be still more intetresting.

Lips CLOSE to the mouthpiece of your telephone, please

Seventy-five per cent. of the complaints we receive concerning people not being able to make themselves heard on the telephone are due to telephone users not "talking into the mouthpiece."

Your lips half an inch from the mouthpiece transmit 320 times as much power into your telephone as they do when six inches from the mouthpiece.

On many calls a six-inch gap between the lips and the mouthpiece will prevent you being heard distinctly. Your lips should be half an inch from the mouthpiece.

Disregard of Courtesy And Selfishness Add to Street Traffic Trouble

Not One Car in Ten Parked Properly on Public Streets, Declares Professor of Highway Engineering, and Urges Proper Education of the Public Along This Line

Elimination of Congestion Possible Aided by Adequate Instructions

DISREGARD of common courtesy and personal selfishness are two of the big factors in traffic congestion and parking troubles in the average sized city and town, according to Prof. John S. Crandell, professor of highway engineering of the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. "If we will walk along the sidewalk of any downtown street in an average size city or town we will not find one car in ten parked properly," Prof. Crandell said. "If the cars are parked parallel to the curb, not one in ten will have its tires within six inches of the curb.

"The chances are that before we walk many blocks we will come to a place where a large car could park easily. If we stop for a minute we will probably see some delivery truck dart into the hole at an angle, the driver will jump out, leaving his engine racing, and rush into the store to deliver a package. The rear end of the truck may stick out into the traffic stream eighteen inches or more, causing the oncoming cars either to have to turn out or stop altogether because of the cars coming from the other direction. The driver will probably rush out of the store, jump in, and whip his car out into the traffic again and away, leaving the parking space vacant and throwing confusion into the ranks of oncoming traffic.

THE NERVOUS DRIVER

"If by chance some inexperienced driver happened to be directly behind the truck when it swung into the curb, the chances are that he or she becomes so rattled by the blowing of the horns of the other cars in the rear that it was impossible to park even a small car properly in this large space, or, instead of trying to park at all, the flustered one probably drove on slowly frantically looking for another place to park, still further retarding traffic by the slow speed that the quaking driver maintained until he or she could regain control of the shattered nerves.

"Again, some fair damsel with a big speedy car spies the open space between the parked cars and she swings her long wheelbased car into the gap, making no attempt to get anywhere near the curb. She either drives straight in or curves her wheels so that a space of three or four feet remains where she stops between her tires and the curb—'so it will be easy to get out again'. She is going shopping, so the chances are that the car is left sticking out into the traffic three or four feet for fifteen minutes or longer.

"This is just one form of parking trouble. There are others. Among these are the problems of parking at an angle to the curb. This method makes it possible to park more cars to the block than by parking parallel to the curb, but it, too, has its disadvantages.

SOME COMPUTATIONS

"It has been computed that twenty-six vehicles parked parallel to the curb will take up 464 feet, twenty-six at a thirty degree angle will require 365 feet, twenty-six at forty-five degrees require 195 feet, while thirty-eight at ninety degrees require 105 feet. It will be seen that much curb space will be saved and a larger number of vehicles will be parked in a given distance than if parallel to the curb, but it must be remembered that cars parked at an angle stick out into the traffic and require wider streets if the steady flow of traffic is to be maintained. The backs of the cars will be from seven to eighteen feet out into the traffic, depending upon the angle they are parked and the length of the cars.

"Again the driver becomes the important factor in the parking problem. If he fails to park in at the uniform angle, or if he leaves his car parked parallel to the curb back of the other parked cars, confusion and congestion of traffic is sure to result. If the car is parked at an angle different from the regular angle, too much space will be taken up. Comment on the practice of parking in the rear of other parked cars is unnecessary, the result is obvious.

"Proper education of the driving public to the need of obeying existing parking regulations is the most effective means of eliminating much of the traffic congestion from this one source. Through newspapers, motion pictures, radio, and the schoolroom, and the power of laughter, the right rules of parking courtesy can be driven home to the public. If public laughter at an individual's discomfort over arrest for faulty parking can be generated, a large per cent of the difficulty will be quickly eliminated, for no one wants to be a public laughing stock."

IMPROVE TONE

Horns develop hoarseness. The remedy usually is a simple matter of adjustment. A thin coin applied to the adjusting nut and a little energy are all the ingredients necessary to effect the remedy in most cases.

What has become of the motorist who used to boast of how slowly his car would travel in high gear?

Large Demand For Reconditioned Cars Now Reported

WITH the Spring song of the motor growing in volume throughout the land, the demand for reconditioned cars is showing a heavy increase. The bargain hunter, who possesses a long head, as well as a long purse, is actively circulating hither and yon to see what the automotive industry has in vehicles awaiting transfer from one owner to another.

The average car of today is built to give satisfactory service for 75,000 to 125,000 miles. That is the estimate placed by the engineers on the mechanism. Of course there are certain parts and accessories which should be renewed, but the main motive ensemble will perform as per schedule. On this basis the buyer who obtains a so-called "used car," which has been run only a short distance in proportion to the limit of performance, has a car well worth owning.

Goldstream Hill Work Reduces Grade

Work on the Goldstream Hill, the last remaining bad stretch of the Malahat section of the Island Highway is now progressing rapidly. Though practically impassible earlier in the week, due to a gravel fill and heavy rains, motorists may now, by keeping to the centre of the road and driving slowly, negotiate this section without trouble. The accompanying photograph shows a section of the road which was widened last year.

DEVELOPMENTS ON PISTON FEATURED

Chrysler Engineer Tells How Principle Contributes to Better Efficiency

Quietly and rather unobtrusively, one of the motor car improvements that has been going on for five years and is today beginning to receive wide recognition is the development of pistons from the older cast iron design to aluminum alloy of the Iso-Therm Invar type. This piston is one of the features in the recently-announced new Chrysler "75" and "65," which have attained even greater success than any previous Chrysler cars.

Fred M. Zeder, vice-president in charge of Chrysler engineering, and head of the group which pioneered these and many other modern-day motor car developments, points out that the piston is one of the busiest and most important parts in a motor car. Each piston starts and stops some 6,000 times for every mile an automobile is driven. Any discovery that increases their efficiency or lengthens their life is therefore of first importance.

"Automotive engineers have long recognized that aluminum alloy, as piston material, possesses two fundamental advantages," says Mr Zeder. "These are its light weight and high rate of heat conductivity. Light weight is essential to overcome inertia, to produce a smooth and vibrationless flow of power, and to reduce pressure on connecting rod and main bearings to a minimum—particularly so because the stresses which result from the reciprocating parts of the engine increase as the square of its speed.

"The extent to which this additional Chrysler pioneering has influenced the entire automobile industry is evidenced in the fact that 85 per cent of all cars now built have aluminum alloy pistons. Chrysler, however, is the exclusive user of the Iso-Therm Invar principle."

Railroads Use Motor Trucks for Economy In Transportation

NEW YORK, April 20—Highways, airways, waterways and railways have the common job of transportation, and are not intrinsically competitive, in the opinion of A. J. Brosseau, vice-president of the commercial car division of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

Six points are cited by Mr. Brosseau as examples of the ways in which the railroads are using motor trucks to effect greater economies. He also brings out the fact that sixty steam railroads of the country are using about 1,200 motor buses.

Six major ways in which motor transport is proving serviceable to the railroads are outlined by Mr Brosseau as follows:

1. In line haul. To replace abandoned branch rail lines or to extend rail service into sparsely settled districts; (2) as substitutes for local less-than-carload or "peddler" way-freight trains; (3) in terminal work, in developing container-car systems; (4) for assembling and distributing less-than-carload lot, or l. c. l. shipments from and to off-track freight stations located in central points of a city which are not served by rail lines; (5) to replace transfer cars used in terminal interchange of l. c. l. freight between different rail lines, (6) for store-door delivery.

LOOSE CONNECTIONS

When a bulb burns up brightly and then burns out the source of the trouble most likely is a loose connection. Starting with the battery terminals, a check of the various connections usually will quickly disclose which is responsible. Motorists have spent considerable money in buying new bulbs and putting them into the sockets before checking for the trouble. It always means more bulbs.

Roads in France Most Numerous And Straightest

THE roads of France are the straightest in Europe as well as the most numerous to the square mile. The Romans began them, and when Napoleon, the greatest roadmaker of modern French history, improved them, after the good work done by those other royal road makers, Henry IV, Louis XIII and Louis XIV, he was in many cases consolidating for his armies roads over which the Roman legions had marched many centuries before.

ENTHUSIASTIC DRIVERS FOUND

Royal Family of Nepal Overcame Greatest Difficulties to Enjoy Studebaker Efficiency

If there were a championship award for the world's most enthusiastic motorist it would undoubtedly go to some member of the royal family of Nepal. Nepal is a little kingdom on the northern border of India, almost under the shadow of Mount Everest, and there are few places in the world harder to reach by automobile.

A representative of the royal family recently took delivery in Calcutta of a Studebaker President Eight limousine, a Studebaker Dictator Berline, and two Erskine Sixes. But the royal family resides in Khatmandu, capital of Nepal. The new cars had to be shipped by rail from Calcutta to a city thirty miles from the capital. From there they were driven to within eighteen miles of Khatmandu. For the final eighteen miles of the trip, however, the cars had to be transported by aerial cable over valleys and mountains where there is no sign of a road. Travelers are carried over this eighteen mile stretch in coolie chairs.

After having surmounted all these difficulties to get their cars, the royal famimly can operate them on just twenty-two miles of road—which is the total extent of the little kingdom's highway system.

REMOVES TURN HAZARD

In turning around on a rural road, there is one preventive step against getting stuck. That involves, simply, seeing that if one pair of wheels must get off the pavement the front two are selected. They have nothing to do with driving the car, and if they should get stuck, the rear wheels usually can pull them out.

CAR'S SETTING IS TEST OF BEAUTY

Nation-Wide Spring Showing for New Chevrolet Six During Week April 20-27

Yesterday Chevrolet showrooms throughout Canada blossomed out as fashion salons for a one-week, nationwide "Spring Showing" of the new Chevrolet Six.

So much has been spent in making this year's car a thing of style and beauty, as well as of mechanical excellence, that it was felt necessary to make some unusual effort to display the seven models in a manner both appropriate and convincing. The national "Spring Showing" is the result.

"In the past," Ross Mackinnon, general sales manager for the Chevrolet Motor Company, points out, "elaborate showroom settings have usually been reserved for the large and expensive cars—merely because the smaller, less costly cars failed to look their best against such backgrounds. But this year we have developed in the new Chevrolet Six a car which holds its own in the most ornate surroundings. This was proven at the big motor shows at various points in Canada, and now we are out to demonstrate the fact to car buyers everywhere."

In consequence of which decision, Chevrolet dealers have been engaged for a week past in preparations for the big event. In many cases experts in decoration have been engaged. Flowing draperies, Oriental rugs, palms, ferns and exotic flowers have been conscripted for the purpose of making the "test" of the New Chevrolet's beauty as severe as possible.

Motorists Urged to Include First Aid Kits in Equipment

Every motor vehicle should be equipped with a small first aid kit containing an antiseptic liquid, a sterile salve for burns, two triangular bandages and similar materials which will make it possible to administer first aid for the slight as well as serious injuries which may be encountered while out on the road.

With such a kit the treatment of cuts is so easy that it will be used, the application of the sterile salve will relieve the pain for burns, and the easily applied bandages will keep out dirt and protect the injury. The bandages can also be used to stop bleeding, and thus prevent fatal hemorrhages resulting from accidents. Then when the doctor comes he will find the "emergency" cared for and direct such other treatment as may be necessary.

CHEVROLET TRUCK A UTILITY CARRIER

Demand for Commercial Cars of Famous Make Constantly on Increase

Although public interest in the six-cylinder Chevrolet has been largely centred on the various passenger car models, a large number of orders have been received for trucks in Victoria. The commercial line consists of a one and a half-ton utility truck, light delivery truck and sedan delivery, according to the Begg Motor Co., Ltd., local Chevrolet dealer organization.

Powered by the new six-cylinder valve-in-head engine, affording added power, acceleration and speed, the new Chevrolet commercial line provides unusual performance at a remarkably low cost of operation. The engine which will drive these low-priced commercial cars is a product into which Chevrolet and General Motors threw jointly their enormous experimental resources.

The engine is fully enclosed with high compression, non-detonating head, and develops 32 per cent more horsepower than its famous four-cylinder predecessor. Among its features is a fuel pump which insures a positive and uniform supply of gasoline to the carburetor under all driving conditions.

The ton and a half utility truck has a four-speed forward and reverse transmission, insuring a more efficient application of engine power. The transmission box has a power takeoff outlet to which various power devices can be applied. The new utility truck has a new low loading height of forty-one inches from the ground, which is made possible by a special "kickup" feature in its frame.

MAKES BIG SALES GAIN

Sales of the Studebaker President Eight for the first three months of this year were 218 per cent greater than for the corresponding period of 1928.

Deeds, not words, build a good name! The name of Dodge Brothers stands for endurance, trustworthiness, long life. Its reputation for dependability rests on a solid and unshakable foundation of years of honest motor car manufacture. The name of Walter P. Chrysler stands for style, for engineering leadership and integrity. His genius has been proved by a long succession of achievements that have virtually revolutionized motor car construction and design. That is why the new Dodge Brothers Six is so outstanding in character and behavior. The sturdiness so long associated with Dodge Brothers cars is a guarantee of its stamina. Its vivid style and spirited performance typify it as a Chrysler creation.

GAS TRANSPORT AIDS ANDREWS

HEAD OF AMERICAN MUSEUM EXPEDITION FOUND MOTOR CARAVAN SATISFACTORY

Increased Mobility Enabled Ten Years Explorations to Be Carried Out in Twelve Months

NEW YORK, April 20.—When the 1929 Central Asiatic Expedition of the American Museum of Natural History, headed by Roy Chapman Andrews, sets out this Spring into the Gobi desert in the wilds of Central Asia, its chief means of exploration will be the automobile.

This expedition has ventured year after year into this little-explored section of the world in an effort to bring back to civilization secrets of a forgotten past. In early years expeditions were transported by camels. Sometimes as many as 1,700 camels formed the caravan.

But in 1922 Andrews took a fleet of five automobiles They proved so satisfactory that the following years have seen this number increased to eight. All are products of the Dodge Brothers factory in Detroit.

"Our motor caravan of eight Dodge cars, making 100 miles a day," said Andrews before he left here, "has permitted us to do virtually ten years of camel exploration in one season and has enabled us to blaze a new trail into the great sand wastes, across a land where petrified bones are found of fantastic monsters that walked the earth 35,000,000 years ago.

"Some of the grueling tests our cars were called upon to meet were standing under a broiling sun with the temperature at 140 degrees, withstanding changes in temperature of 70 degrees in five hours and standing up with the temperature at 45 degrees below zero as wind breakers before our tents, while blizzards heaped snow two feet deep along the desert they would cross the next day.

"Rivers thirty feet wide and four feet deep were crossed where there were no fords, the cars being rushed at full speed, showers of spray shooting out from the sides of the hood as we forced our way up the opposite bank.

"Other obstacles included a 5,000-mile trip over the sand with treacherous stretches of quicksand, desert storms which at times literally buried our caravan as we lay in our tents waiting for them to pass, grades where the cars seemed to stand on end, and acres of rocky terrain."

Andrews expects to continue this year the explorations of last year.

"It was with the cars that all the real exploring was done," he says. "We were equipped with 400 gallons of gas and 100 gallons of oil, which were to last us five months."

THE TIMES THAT TRY MEN'S SOULS

The TRAFFIC COP

Motor deaths in the city of Chicago decreased from 108 in December of last year to 42 in January. Part of this enviable record is doubtless due to the stormy weather experienced by Chicago during January, with a resultant drop in auto traffic, but there is another reason: Slippery streets and snowstorms force upon motorists the idea of great care. They expect danger and look for it and are prepared to meet it. The attitude is a good one to assume throughout fair weather as well as foul.

"Do not talk to the motorman" is a common admonition on every street car and for a good reason. The motorman can drive his car safely only when his entire attention is given to the job. It should be a slogan for automobile drivers. If you do talk to him, if you as a driver talk to the man next to you, be sure it does not distract from your job of driving And keep your face to the front.

USED IT AS A WATERING-CAN

"Why did you send for the Muggleswick fire engine? You've got one of your own," said a countryman to the captain of the village fire brigade.

"Of course we have," replied the captain, "but so many people borrowed it last year to water their lawns that we don't know where it is!"

TRAFFIC OF TODAY TESTS TIRES' MAKE

Maximum Service Impossible for Rubbers Not Built up to Requirements of Minute

You can't teach an old tire to do new tricks. And that's exactly what the high-powered, fast-starting, quick-stopping 1929 car demands of rubber equipment. You can't expect maximum service from rubber tires not built for today's maximum requirements.

This, in a nutshell, is the reason for the introduction of the new Seiberling all-tread tire, according to Mr. Fred Ramsdale, of Red's Service Station, local Seiberling dealer.

ADDED BURDENS

Pointing out some of the added burdens that the new cars impose on tires, Mr. Ramsdale called attention to the seven-foot stop, seventy-mile gait and lightning getaway which are characteristic of today's car. A 1929 car cannot give its best performance if it is equipped with 1928 tires.

"Look at the four-wheel brakes, for instance. If they are to work properly, the car must be equipped with tires that give the greatest possible traction—the greatest area of contact between the tread and the road. An old-fashioned tire won't do.

"The development of the flexible 1929 motor car was a challenge to the rubber tire industry. A new tire had to be developed that would be up to the standard of new car performance.

"Realizing that it wasn't a job for any tire known to the industry, the Seiberling Rubber Company set about to construct an entirely new tire, built on new principles, under new specifications, and of better material.

SECURES RESULT

"Today we have the result—the new Seiberling all-tread tire—a masterpiece of tire building. Designed especially to withstand the tremendous burden that the new cars place on rubber equipment, the new Seiberling all-tread tire is something more than a tire for today's car—it is the tire of tomorrow."

Policeman—"No, sir, not positive; but his wife says he brought home a manhole cover and tried to play it on the gramophone."

New Motor Being Tested in England

A new type of motor is being tried out in England, in which a rotary sleeve valve along the top of the engine is used. It is a simplified adaptation of the sleeve valve principle. Here a cylinder with intake and exhaust ports for each operating cylinder is placed under the head, driven by gears from the main shaft. As it revolves it opens and closes the ports of the row of six or eight cylinders in the engine, permitting gasoline to enter or the burned gases to leave each chamber in order.

CAR BODIES MAY ENCLOSE ALL PARTS

Fabricated From Metal Future Superstructure May Cover All Portions of Vehicle

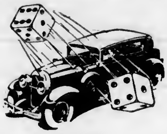
Apparently the trend in automobile bodies is toward a body designed, not simply as a superstructure for the chassis, but as an enclosure for the whole, fabricated from metal that gives it strength, yet results in parts that are nearly insensible as to size, particularly of the upper body and the door pillars, according to a statement made by George J. Mercer to the Society of Automotive Engineers. In fact, he believes that the future body will embrace all present extraneous and project parts, such as lamps and fenders.

Bodies are better today than in the past, he asserted, first because more time, money and effort are expended in their production, and second because the body is today the best merchandising asset of the automobile salesman. Car buyers neither know nor care much about technical details or new cars, since virtually all automobiles are now built to good standards of performance; but prospective buyers are interested in bodies and their details because these matters arouse a sense of taste and style and appeal to their individual judgment.

Mr. Mercer emphasized the need of providing comfortable seating for passengers, on the basis of reasonably standardized dimensions, adding that comfort is dependent primarily, not on overstuffed upholstery, but on a seat design allowing the relaxed posture of the human body to be maintained without fatigue.

Policeman—"As soon as I saw you come round the bend I said to myself, 'Forty-five, at least.'"

Lady Driver—"How dare you? It's this hat that makes me look so old."



Don't Gamble on new car Lubrication

THE lubrication that is given to a new car has a very direct bearing upon the life and service that you are going to get out of the car.

The object of lubrication is to reduce friction to a minimum and only an expert knowledge of greases and their quality will achieve this purpose.

Thin cheap greases will eventually aggravate rather than reduce friction.

"WHIZ" GEAR GREASE contains those two necessary qualities—fluidity and rich smooth oiliness—that mean free moving parts and easy starting. In a new car, all moving parts are stiff and rough. Friction inevitably smooths these down, but in doing so, injures your grease. Right here is why "WHIZ" GEAR GREASE is so valuable—its richness—its body—have the strength and ability to resist the effects of friction.

And of course the correct grade of grease is just as important as the quality. Your dealer sells and recommends "WHIZ" GEAR GREASE.

"One pound of fresh grease added to four pounds of worn grease means five pounds of old grease."

high speeds—sudden stops!

MOTOR cars travel faster these days regardless of road surfaces—and tires must be built to take severe punishment. Gum Cushioned Tires are built for modern high speed and quick stops—for rough roads and smooth roads—for resistance to flexing strains and bruising jolts—it's the cushion principle that saves them. MEDICAL TESTS FOR AUTOISTS IS URGED

Number of Killed by Motorists in Paris Results in Demand for Investigation

PARIS, April 20.—An automobile death list of 200 persons each month is arousing medical specialists to seek a way of checking the mounting accident rate

Police reports in the Paris district show that slightly more than half the fatalities are due to "imprudence," but the doctors think that some of the imprudence is a wrong label for physical incapacity.

Dr Raoul Blondel suggests that defective sensibilities and faulty reactions often are to blame Medical tests for driver's licences have been proposed, but the government decided such a programme unworkable because of its expense and inconvenience.

Nevertheless, many medical authorities are urging the adoption of such a plan to be administered through central examination institutions. The physicians say that licences should be in force for a period of only five years, when another examination should be considered necessary.

Tests made of 100 chauffeurs examined by a Paris bus system and 100 men otherwise acceptable who had not taken the examination showed that the former had 16 per cent fewer accidents.

Japan Delegates Approve Nash "400"

Nash manufacturing principles and merchandising policies received the unqualified approval of these overseas visitors, who were guests at Kenosha Nash headquarters recently. The party was headed by Seishichi Iwasaki (centre), of the Aoi Motor Car Company, Nash distributor in Tokio. Mr. Iwaskai, a graduate of Cornell University, is the Japanese employers' delegate en route to the International Labor Conference in Geneva. He is also president of the Tokio Gas Company and vice-president of the Tokio Chamber of Commerce.

OPEN SPRING NASH EXHIBIT

DELIGHTFUL COLORS IN PASTEL SHADES FEATURED IN DEMONSTRATION WEEK

Beautiful Salon Bodies in Acme of Style Particularly Appeal to Female Motorists

Delightful Spring and Summer colors in the pastel shades, which mark another long step toward perfection in body finish for the new "400" series of Nash cars, appear as one of the most pleasing and interesting features of the complete "Spring Style Show and Nash Demonstration Week," arranged by the Begg Motor Co., Ltd., local Nash dealers.

These attractive colors, redolent of the gay Spring season and the lively motoring vogue, are the results of months of study by color experts both at home and abroad, and lend unusual charm to the display Their appeal, coupled with thorough demonstrations of the many mechanical and comfort features which Nash alone offers in the "400" models, makes one of the most important automobile events of the season in Victoria

Two and four-door sedans, coupes, cabriolets and open models which meet every motoring taste and requirement are included in the special display and demonstration.

Women motorists in particular will find a new type of automobile interest in the beautiful salon bodies, which have reached the acme of style in this Spring showing through additions of the handsome "Royal" and "Regal" side-mounted wheel equipment and the richness of their fitments.

The most striking performance feature of the "400" cars lies in the twin ignition, high compression and high turbulence motors developed by Nash engineers after months of intensive experimenting and exhaustive tests In the Advanced and Special Six models, the motor units—for the first time in automobile engineering history—twin ignition, high compression, the valve-in-head engine principle, the seven-bearing crankshaft with hollow crank pins, and aluminum alloy pistons, which employ Invar struts to insure the closest possible fit High compression and high turbulence are combined in the Standard Six motor, with aluminum alloy pistons and Invar struts, seven-bearing crankshaft and torsional vibration damper and L-head principle of construction, to make it the unquestioned leader in its field.

NEW PRESIDENT OF CANADA DURANT

Roy D. Kerby Receives Promotion in Recognition of Progress Made Under His Direction

In recognition of the progress that has been made by Durant Motors of Canada, Limited, during the past three years and the prestige which this company has gained during that time, under his leadership, Mr. Roy D. Kerby was elected president of the Canadian Company at a meeting of the directors following the annual meeting of shareholders

This is evidence of the esteem in which Mr. Kerby is held by the new group which has taken over the active management of Durant Motors, Inc., in the United States and which includes Fred J Haines, president; A 1. Phil, R. A. Vail, John A. Nichols, Jr.

While it is well-known that Mr Kerby and his executives in the Canadian organization have won the confidence of the Canadian public through the policies they have established, he gives the credit for the company's success to the loyalty of the dealer organization that extends from coast to coast and the factory staff responsible for the building of "a good car."

HUPP CUTS ALL PRICES ON AUTOS

All Models of New Century Eight and Six-Cylinder Lines Affected by Change

DETROIT, April 20—A sweeping price reduction, affecting all models in the New Century Eight and six-cylinder lines, was announced last week by the Hupp Motor Car Corporation.

The price reduction is the most complete ever made by Hupmobile and comes, according to the announcement, as part of the company's extensive programme for this year which will more than double its production capacity.

The tremendous manufacturing programme, which includes a marked increase of production and sales activities of the company, is the basis for the general price reductions. But a few months ago, the Hupp Motor Car Corporation purchased the huge and modern plants in Cleveland, Ohio, which have more than a million square feet of manufacturing space available The revamping and retooling of these plants as a virile part of the production division of the greater Hupmobile organization is now in progress Approximately $2,000,000 is being spent in these plants alone to make them the most efficient in the industry. In addition, Hupmobile recently acquired control of and has increased the equipment and production capacity of several smaller and subsidiary concerns as part of this far-reaching expansion programme for this year

Auto Industry Owes Much to Women's Aid

By H. CLIFFORD BROKAW

In the Spring the fancies of many young men are said to lightly turn to thoughts of love Woman is one of the special charms of this season. It is a logical time to consider the influence of women in the automotive industry. Is the motor vehicle a man's machine primarily? Or has the female of the species attained an equality with man in this field, as she is attaining in the realm of economics?

It is safe to say that in practically all respects the women are as much at home behind the wheel of a motor car as are the men. In some respects it is doubtless true that the women have the edge on men when it comes to a consideration of motor matters. Certainly the women are an important factor in the whole business of motoring. Their influence is very much in evidence.

SOURCE OF BEAUTY TRACED

Much of the beauty which is an outstanding characteristic of the modern automobile is probably due to the influence of women. Not that the women have little consideration for the mechanical efficiency of an automobile They expect the cars to run and give satisfaction from a mechanical standpoint—they take this for granted. They do, however, have a well developed aesthetic sense which makes them susceptible to unusual beauty in the lines of an automobile, and consequently manufacturers recognizing this fact have produced cars of unusual beauty and much of the satisfaction which people get out of the good looks of their cars today can be credited to the discrimination of women.

This influence of women is even seen in the places where automobiles are on display and sale At the automobile shows the environment is always in keeping with the most charming effects of interior beauty. A modern automobile salesroom is now a place of luxurious decorations and appointments of refinement

INTRODUCTION OF COLORS

The introduction of color and the development of various shades in automobile bodies, which together with the majestic sweep of the lines of an automobile go to make it as handsome a vehicle as one could wish, also are due largely to the influence of women. Man is in the habit of getting along with drab colors and would probably be quite content with the conventional black as a color for his automobile Women, on the other hand, are used to wearing vivid colors themselves and are consequently more interested in the delightful color effects which are achieved in the latest automobile colors.

The interior luxuriousness of automobiles, as now produced, shows the influence of women. Men are more easily persuaded to put up with certain inconveniences, as far as softness of cushions are concerned or as far as the presence of the little extras, such as vases for flowers, ash receivers for cigarettes and the like are concerned, provided the machine takes them where they want to go and when. Women, on the other hand, insist on having these comforts and some of these accessories, and many automobiles have been sold because of some such factor which appealed especially to the feminine interest of the household to which the car is to belong.

HIGH ARTISTRY IN WILLYS-KNIGHT

High Standard of Performance Shown in Road Test With Six Model

Willys-Overland, in presenting an entirely new line of Willys-Knight sixes, strikingly different from all previous models to meet the advanced style demand and an engine performance that sets a new high standard of performance, indicates that these new cars will register throughout 1929, the greatest sales mark ever reached in the Willys-Knight division.

The work of designing the new Willys-Knight Six was started more than a year ago, the engineers and body designers being given full sway to produce a line of Knight engined vehicles that would strike a new note of style, quality and performance in the Willys-Knight Six price classification.

In this work all of the vast manufacturing facilities of the Willys-Overland organization were placed at the disposal of these men, resulting in the new line of Knight engined cars which executives of the company declare will reach a sales volume during the current year in excess of any previous sale record in Willys-Knight history.

The bodies are characterized by entirely new lines beginning at the newly designed radiator and continuing on back to the carefully rounded rear quarters. These smart lines are enhanced through the employment of sweeping, one-piece full crown fenders. The spare wire wheel is mounted in a fender well on the right forward fender, this being in keeping with the latest practice in design among the higher priced cars.

In the adoption of the new "finger-tip control," which permits absolute control of starting the motor, operating the lights and sounding the horn without changing the driving position, Willys-Overland brings to the Willys-Knight field the greatest driving convenience since the self-starter. This equipment is standard on all products of the Toronto manufacturer.

Japanese Are Much Disturbed

So agitated have some of the Japanese public become over the form of Japan's signature to the Kellogg anti-war pact, a form in which, it is contended, the prestige of the Emperor is involved, that Mr J. Shinobou, professor of international politics and the history of diplomacy at Waseda University, has found it a duty to enter the dispute. Professor Shinobu writes to The Trans-Pacific, Tokio, the following letter:

"To the Editor:

"Permit me to address a few words on an absurdly agitated phrase 'in the names of their respective peoples.' It is unthinkable that the phrase would have any other significance than to serve as a rhetorical attribute for emphasizing solemnity in declaring condemnation of war. Examples are not rare in international pacts in which such qualifications, especially those relating to divine invocation, were pompously inserted. Thus the Treaty of Berlin of 1878 began with the phrase, "Au nom du Dieu tout puissant." Peru appears to be particularly fond of something of the kind, as we see that her treaties, for instance, with Russia (1847), with Portugal (1853), with France (1861) —all have the exordium, "Au nom de Dieu, auteur et legislateur de l'Univars," or other invocation of like nature. Even in fluvial conventions between Peru and Brazil of 1851 and 1866, the phrase "au nom de la thessainte et tres indivisible trinite" was inserted. Such was not only in treaties between or among Christendom, as the Treaty of Paris of 1856 to which Turkey was one of the signatories had the introductory words of "Au nom de Dieu, Tout-puissant." These are all but the epithets merely to make the pacts pompous and consequential, and have not the slightest concern with the question of the treaty-making power in the constitutions of the respective signatory states.

"The sense of Article I of the Anti-War Pact is that each contracting party declares in the name of its people that it condemns recourse to war. It means, in the case of Japan, that His Majesty the Emperor, in whose hands the sovereign right of concluding treaties is solely and exclusively retained, coincides with that right an Anti-War Pact, in which he declares in the name of his subjects the renunciation of war. The declaration as such and the right of concluding treaties are two different matters. Question of infringement of Imperial prerogative on treaty-making may be raised only in such a hypothetical case as when an organ of the state, with no constitutional competence, happened to conclude a treaty without any full power invested from the Throne, and does not at all apply in the present case. This distinction is most important, though some section of the public seems to confuse the two. Were it to be said that to declare a certain thing in the name of the people is to transfer the Imperial prerogative into their hands, then we should arrive at the logical conclusion that the divine invocation often seen in treaties among Christendom or others transferred the treaty-making right from the sovereign or the Parliament into the hand of the Almighty. That is ridiculous. To mistranslate "in the name of" into Japanese equivalent to "for the benefit of," "in the interest of," "on people's behalf," etc., would be more than ridiculous.

"Those who blame the Pact as unconstitutional appear to reason from illusory premises. Politically speaking, however, it might have been wiser for the Government to avoid, if possible, the adoption of the phrase as such, which might give rise to public agitation and the authorities concerned should be unable to escape the charge of having been careless in handling the matter at the outset, as well as that of causing us to assume the responsibility for the procrastination of the Pact's coming into effect only on account of our present attitude. But that is another question."

PEERLESS ENJOYS RECORD SALES

First Quarter of Year Reveals Greatest Shipment of Cars in History of Company

After completing a first quarter, which from the standpoint of shipments was the greatest in the long history of the company, officials of the Peerless Motor Car Corporation sponsor the prophecy that all shipment records will go by the boards for the month of April, according to Mr. C. W. Lovell, of the Atkinson Motor Co., Ltd.

Peerless is working at capacity on the low-priced Six-61, which has done more than any one thing to put the company in its present strategic position. This car, lower in price than any other automobile ever produced by the big Cleveland factory, is in great demand from coast to coast and is the direct cause of putting many scores of new names on the roster of Peerless dealers.

Production on the new Straight Eight-125 is also just getting well under way, factory officials point out. Many large shipments of other models have been held up waiting for this most recent Peerless, they say.

This new eight, the aristocrat of the 1929 Peerless line, will shortly be announced to the public through newspaper advertising. The car is asid to possess exceptional power and flexibility due to the fact that the motor is equipped with a duplex carburetor that makes possible an even flow of gasoline to all eight cylinders. Another unusual item of equipment, it is understood, is the new "no-back" device which automatically stops back rolling on the hills.

Malahat in Fine Condition This Summer

Extensive road work carried out by the Department of Public Works last year together with the resurfacing by oil, when the dry weather sets in, will put the Malahat Drive in first-class condition this Summer. This scene showe the new bridge over Niagara Canyon which was constructed last year.

United States Engineers Size Up Average Motorist

Engineers of the United States Bureau of Public Roads have measured us and catalogued us from observations made on the public highways. From these measurements we may see what peculiar animals we are when we take hold of a steering wheel and go out on the high roads for a spin.

For instance, no matter how wide the road may be, we keep as far away from the right edge as possible. We'd rather skin dangerously close to an approaching motorist to our left, these engineers find, than move over to the right to avoid a crash.

But if there's a white line down the middle of the highway, we almost invariably respect it and stay over on our own side. And if there's a smooth white shoulder to the right, we move even farther over to the edge.

Taking a turn, we move over to the inside and cut the turn short, but we give ourselves little leeway when we have to take a turn to the right.

Going down hill on light grades we speed along on high, but keep to the centre of the road. When the grades are so steep as to require the use of low gear, on the other hand, we hug the edge of the road more closely.

As a result of these observations, the engineers have found, we motorists need a 24-foot road for 20-foot driving. Because of this clearance, the narrowest possible road for safe driving should be 20 feet, they say.

Paradoxically, however, the engineers would widen the road at turns where they have noticed traffic to crowd up into a narrower margin toward the inside!

As engineers, these observers are good psychologists. They've found a new and perhaps more scientific way to measure the operations of man's brains.

NEW SIX-CYLINDER IS ADDED TO LINE

McLaughlin-Buick Announce Something Entirely Different in Design and Appearance

OSHAWA, Ont., April 20.—Announcement has been made by R. S. McLaughlin, president, General Motors of Canada, Limited, that McLaughlin-Buick will add to its manufacture of motor cars by building a new six-cylinder automobile.

"The new car will offer a Buick-built product in a lower price field," he said. "It will be entirely different in design and appearance and will in no way replace or conflict with the established McLaughlin-Buick line. The name of the new car, together with its details, will be made public in the early Summer."

Metropolitan Police Emphasize Danger Of Any Speed Limit

After reviewing all the speed limits in the Metropolitan police area and in the County of Middlesex (England) the London and Home Counties Advisory committee have come to the conclusion that speed limits generally "serve no useful purpose."

In a report to the Minister of Transport they state that the Commissioner of Police (then Sir William Horward) had suggested that all limits might be abolished. The committee's conclusions are:

In some cases traffic conditions in themselves enforce a limitation of speed on any reasonable driver, and unreasonable drivers can be dealt with under the existing general legislation.

Speed limits may in themselves be dangerous—e.g., a limit of ten miles per hour may tend to become the minimum speed irrespective of traffic conditions within the streets affected.

Speed limits have proved in practice difficult to enforce.

Public safety, which is the chief aim in fixing a speed limit, can be provided far more effectively by the general law.

If you're Looking for CHARACTER

THERE are people who look for "character" in the car they buy. They want performance. They expect appearance. They appreciate luxury. But they demand individuality.

It was for such people that this finer Oldsmobile was created.

Leaving aside its astonishingly low price (now lower than ever) Oldsmobile is an exclusive car . . a car of character and distinction. It is a fine car with all the engineering excellence, all the distinguished style, all the quiet elegance and luxury, with all the easy mastery of miles and minutes, and all the desirable attributes of a fine car.

And the attraction that Oldsmobile possesses is more than the result of its 62 h.p. high-compression engine . . more than its handsome Bodies by Fisher . . more than its Lovejoy Shock Absorbers and scores of fine car features. It is the blending together, in one easily attainable car, of all the qualities which spell "character" in an automobile.

What Is British Columbia's "Hoi Polloi"?

Laborer Has Scholarship of His Own, But Recognizes Limitations

No. 1

PART I

The ancient Greeks coined and familiarly used a term intended to designate a fraction of the populace of the nation, albeit a major fraction. The term was hoi polloi. It has not been translated into equivalent English with appreciable success. The nearest approach to it we have in the English language is "the people," and commonly the term is translated in that way. Yet to speak of the people of the British Isles is vastly different from a designation of the classes described by the Grecian appellation, hoi polli.

The Roman appellation "populi," in its essential meaning, splits the difference between the Greek and English definitions, while their word "demos" inclines more toward the Grecian than the English lexicography. Probably it was this delicacy in the shades of meaning and the eternal search after color in definition that made necessary the word "proletariat," yet even the latter has limitations which obscure the exact meaning of the original term.

Greece appeare to hava had, in the zenith of her civilization, four distinct classifications of human society These were royalty, the nobility, the aristocracy and hoi polloi. Philosophers and scholars belonged to the aristocracy. Merchants, traders and craftsmen were embraced by hoi polloi. These were not even specialized by a separate classification such as became convenient under French civilization when they were designated bourgeoise. This last word has come into common usage in English-speaking countries to designate particular orders which maintain an assumed superiority over craftsmen and proletarians.

Thus, a war of words has kept pace with a war of classes and it is an interesting feature of the study of languages to pursue the trail of language makers in their efforts to coin terms which, each having its own measure, will designate exactly the social standing of individual members of the body politic. These efforts extend over centuries and, in the English language, every shade or even shadow of color has been employed to mark the limitations which differentiate apparent or artificial degrees in human society.

Taken as individuals, and writing alphabetically, some of these designations are: Attendant, agent, bondman, bailiff, butler, cupbearer, cad, clerk, constable, domestic, footman, flunkey, groom, gillie, henchman, herdsman, helot, hireling, jockey, liegeman, lackey, menial, messenger, orderly, pensioner, puppet, parasite, retainer, servant, squire, seneschal, secretary, subaltern, serf, satellite, slave, subject, tipster, usher, valet, vassal, villain, waiter, warden.

Taken as an aggregation they are expressed thus: Tribe, troop, squad, corps, company, crowd, throng, crew gang, horde, rabble, mob, mass.

It is unnecessary to classify the higher orders of society as these will not be discussed in this article. Already it must be apparent, however, that it takes all sorts of people to make a world. Every one of the designations in the individual class referred, at some period of human history, to a distinctive quality of service and the importance of the service gave distinction to the name. A careful study of individual terms furnishes a series of landmarks by which the evolution of society has progressed and indicates how much of the ancient forms of servitude obtain under our present civilization.

Nevertheless, when the Greeks made the first linguistic distinctions between status in society they designated classes which have persisted through all the ramifications of subsequent historic class evolution. In those countries where the revolutionary reactions of the Great War abolished royalties and nobilities, the aristocracy and hoi polloi still persist. Hoi polloi are to be found in every country, but each and every country shows a tendency to develop a hoi polloi species of its own.

CONDITIONS HERE

This appeare to be particularly the case in British Columbia. Here hoi polloi knows no class excepting that which includes everybody excluded by the class distinctions arbitrarily imposed by those who constitute themselves superior classes. Here hoi polloi regard themselves as good as anybody and reaffirm the modern declaration of equality which says "One man is as good as another if not better." In British Columbia hoi polloi comprises that large, important and indispensible sector of the body politic commonly known as "laborers." The term does not of necessity include wage earners, for there are many workers and breadwinners economically designated wage earners who do not call themselves laborers. A clearer understanding of the order of people meant will appear when it is stated where hoi polloi may be found.

They are in our logging camps, lumber mills, shingle factories, pulp and paper mills, they may be found in our mines, smelters, factories and industrial plants. They work in lumber yards, on the waterfront, on the streets, in certain portions of construction work and in well-defined sections of railway construction and operation. Some of them are found on farms, in extensive orchards and in the varied occupations which grow out of the activities of these. Many of them perform merely menial tasks quite as necessary to economic and social progress as the more highly specialized occupations. They embrace a mass or "mill" of people who, if they could be brought together, would exemplify almost every decent type of vocational life.

They come from so many countries that almost every race is represented. Orientals are not included in what is to be said of hoi polloi in this article. Apart from these they come from the British Isles, Norway, Sweden, Central Europe, Italy, Greece, Scandinavia, a few from France, not many from Germany and still fewer from Russia. There are not many Americans among them; their work is too strenuous.

These widely-diversified nationals find their individual places in the great hive of industry which is British Columbia. Some of them, with peculiar racial adaptation, find employment in particular vocations, no individual branch are good mixers. Even where three or four races are thrown together in similar employment they maintain a disposition to herd. This keeps alive racial distinctions which are detrimental to the development of true Canadianism. It will not be overcome until a second or third generation. Yet it is only the same racial instinct as that which characterizes Anglo-Saxon peoples when these are segregated in foreign countries. The instinct is even more pronounced among Anglo-Saxons for, while there is historic and perennial evidence of real absorption of other nationalities by Anglo-Saxon communities, there is no notable instance of a similar absorption of the Anglo-Saxons by other races. There appears to be something inherent in the constitutional breeding of Anglo-Saxon civilization which overcomes the instincts of other races while the reverse is not apparent. Herein is food for long, deep and contemplative reflection.

Where, then, may hoi polloi be met? Those who have families may be found in their homes, where they are hospitable entertainers. For the rest, you can meet them in restaurants, in social clubs, in their fraternal gatherings, in their bunkhouses and in their shacks. They are not difficult of approach when approached in the right spirit.

RADICALS, NOT REDS

As individuals and in groups they will sit for hours during their unoccupied time—of which many of them have too much—and discuss subjects ordinarily supposed to be far beyond the comprehension of people of this class. Yet their understanding of sound economic principles, of scientific progress, of social questions and theories, of religious and speculative philosophy, must appear amazing to one not familiar with their habits of life and of thought.

They are probably less prejudiced than most people who belong to the social upper crust. Their tolerance is greater and their horizon wider than that of the average man in more intellectual pursuits. True, there are "Reds" among them, but it appears to be an instinctive quality of some mentalities to see red everywhere. The vast body of them, however, are not Reds, though most of them are radicals.

Contrary to popular opinion most of them are voracious readers and it is this fact which gives them within certain limitations—an intellectual equality with many other citizens who have had far better scholastic advantages. Their class segregation drives them into intellectual pursuits while many, with more leisure and more money to spend, employ—or waste—that precious heritage in amusements, social functions and other diversions. Their knowledge of world politics often is astute.

If they fall down anywhere, probably it is in those aesthetic acquisitions which are, and always have been, the peculiar prerogative of the higher classes. Oratorios and operatic performances make little appeal to them, even when they are within reach. They are wise enough to know that this sort of thing requires cultivation and they stay away. They are not often seen at film productions unless these are classical like "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" or "Ben Hur." Wild West shows do not attract them, as they have enough Wild West in their own lives.

Thus they find in literature their cheapest, most fascinating and, on the whole, their best investment of spare time. This is not true of all of them, but it is true of such an astonishing number that, in general reading, they compare favorably with any other class.

How their views have been modified by the events of the last quarter of a century and what some of these views are must furnish the text of a subsequent article.

Airplane Lights the Streets

The siren of an airplane which on being sounded causes an electric "ear" to turn on the lights of the landing field.

VOICES from the air can now banish the mantle of night and make every city and town glow in all the brilliance of its electric light system. The scream of a siren on the wing of a transport airplane soaring at a great height above a city, can pick up energy from the air and amplify it with a tiny electrical "ear," and throw the switches that turn on the city's entire street lighting system or any part of it.

This new electrical "ear" is to be used for turning on the landing lights of airports as an airplane approaches the landing field at night and sounds its siren.

The recent experiments at St. Louis of turning on the street lights was the first practical application of the new "ear" when tuned in to receive the wail of the siren. The airplane's siren gave a short blast and the white beacon of the flying field was turned on. A switch was thrown and the red beacon flashed at the airplane. Then the airplane wailed its siren again, this time giving the signal to the electric "ear" which turned on the lights. There was a buzzing of power in the network of wires, amplifying tubes flashed red and the massive master switches turned miles of streets into brilliantly lighted thoroughfares.

It is claimed that the electric "ear" will save thousands of dollars in lighting airports. Flood lights of a field may be darkened until an approaching airplane sounds its siren, when the "ear" automatically lights the field until the pilot lands and turns off the lights by throwing a switch conveniently placed.

The controlling principle of the "ear" is the newly perfected "grid-glow" tube, which is so sensitive that the energy of a fly crawling an inch up a wall will operate it. The "ear" can be adjusted to operate at only one pitch of sound corresponding to the pitch of an airplane's siren.

HUDSON ANNOUNCE A LIGHT DELIVERY

Big Motor Car Company Pats on Market Specially Designed Carrier

Hudson Motor Car Company, maker of Hudson and Essex cars, has completed plans to launch a line of light delivery commercial vehicles, with bodies specially designed to meet the requirements of the chief users of a carrier of this type. Bodies will be mounted on Essex chassis adopted and designed for this service.

It is announced that the line will be introduced about July and will be marketed through the present Hudson and Essex distributor and dealer organization. Hudson's dealer family, it is said, has been expanding with noteworthy rapidity since the first of the year and covers the country more intensively than at any previous time in the company's history. The Hudson management felt its selling organization would appreciate the added sales opportunity offered by the new product.

Sam C. Mitchell, for several years a sales executive for the Hudson Motor Car Company, has been appointed commercial vehicle manager and will handle the distribution of this entirely new product through the Hudson-Essex distributor and dealer organization. Establishment of a commercial vehicle department marks a decidedly new and important development in the progress of the company.

Emphasis will be laid by the company on smartness, quick acceleration and economy of operation. These are features of Hudson-Essex activity which already have been brought to a high point of development in the manufacture of passenger cars.

OUTPUT OF CARS DURING FEBRUARY

Production of automobiles in Canada numbered 31,287 vehicles in February. This output was the highest reported for any February to date and was only exceeded in May of last year, when the monthly record was established at 33,942 cars. This February's production showed a gain of 59 per cent over the output of 21,501 cars of the previous month and exceeded by 171 per cent the total of 12,504 cars produced in February, 1928.

Of the total output during February, 21,016 cars were made for sale in Canada and 10,271 cars were intended for export. The apparent consumption of automobiles in Canada during the month, as determined by adding the 21,016 cars made for sale in Canada to the 2,929 cars imported, amounted to 23,045 cars.

EASY STEERING

Stiff steering in Winter is more or less inevitable. It is a lot less, however, if the car owner thins the fluid grease in the steering mechanism with a medium grade of lubricating oil.

ON SLIPPERY ROAD

Good as are four-wheel brakes, the engine is still better on slippery surfaces. That is why taking the foot off the gas before reaching a stopping place is better than applying the brakes sharply just upon reaching it.

WHEELS OF FORDS ARE NEW DESIGN

Lightness and Grace Combined With Strength in Welded Spoke Type

Automobile wheels have undergone considerable change within the past ten years, and some of the most notable improvements are to be seen in the wheels with which the new Model A Ford car is equipped.

These new wheels are known as "steel spoke" wheels and are of special design and manufacture. The wheel department in the giant machine shop at Ford City is in reality an industry itself.

The steel spokes, of which there are thirty in each wheel, are made of a fine grade of Ford steel, electrically welded to the steel rim and the hub shell so that the entire wheel—hub, spokes and rim—becomes in reality one piece of steel, with no part that can work or wear loose and weaken the wheel structure or become noisy. Besides, each spoke before being welded to hub and rim is set at just that angle in relation to the other spokes which makes it perform the best possible bracing and pulling function.

The rim of this new Ford wheel is of the "drop centre" type, which gives greater strength to the rim, imparting the same qualities of rigidity that are found in channel and corrugated steel, and which also greatly facilitates changing tires, as the tire, once the air is out, may be removed easily even without the aid of tools.

Because of the one unit construction, as outlined in the previous paragraphs, of this Ford wheel, in case of accident the spokes will not break, but have a tendency to take the force of the impact, thereby saving the car from falling from the cause of a broken wheel and turning over.

JAPAN FEARS NO TROUBLE WITH BRAZIL

Shadow of Another Immigration Dispute Passes, According to Transpacific Writer

LABORERS MOVE WITH SETTLERS

The shadow of another immigration dispute seemed to fall across the Pacific two days ago, but it was only a shadow Mr. Ariyoshi, Japanese Ambassador of Brazil, recently advised caution in regard to the plans of the Overseas Emigration Institute (Kaigai Kogyo Kaisha) which had evidently been credited with the intention of dispatching 15,000 "funded" emigrants to Brazil during the current year. The Kaigai Kogyo Kaisha is a land settlement company which owns land in Brazil and sells it in suitable lots of about seventy-five acres to immigrants with capital But the Brazilian Government wants laborers as well as settlers, and Mr. Ariyoshi's message was to the effect that so large an influx of settlers might give rise to anti-Japanese agitation.

But evidently, according to the information furnished to The Advertiser by the Social Bureau of the Home Office, which has charge of emigration, the Overseas Emigration Institute is aware of the Brazilian point of view, and only proposed to send abroad 3,000 or 4,000 settlers (including their families), the balance of the 15,000 being free laborers with their families. This proportion is believed to be acceptable to Brazil and therefore the officials of the Social Bureau see no reason to change the programme according to which about 15,000 souls, or roughly 3,000 to 4,000 families will leave Japan for Brazil during the current year The laborers, like the settlers, expect to make Brazil their permanent home, and no doubt the majority of them look forward to owning land Meantime they increase the available supply of free labor which Brazil, a rapidly developing country, needs.

MOVEMENT GROWS

Since the passage of the United States Immigration Law, Japanese imigration to Brazil has naturally expanded. It cannot be maintained that Japanese colonists are "pouring" into Brazil, though picturesque writers have said so But there is a steady drip. In forty years it has settled about 70,000 Japanese in the State of Sao Paulo. More than half of that number has entered since 1920, when the Brazilian census showed that 28,000 Japanese resided in the country. Up till now the average number of Japanese emigrants to Brazil (Sao Paulo) has been a thousand yearly; the largest number in any one decade was 12,543 in the period 1906-15. In the next decade the emigrants decreased to 10,096. It was a time of feverish industrial activity in Japan, yet the rapidly-expanding industrialization only reduced the overflow by 2,000 In 1925, however, 4,908 Japanese emigrants went to Brazil. The Japanese in Sao Paulo now number between 55,000 and 60,000 and own 105,911 acres of cultivated land Japanese settlement in Brazil began on a systematic scale in 1913 when Viscount Shibusawa promoted the Brazil Colonization Company with a capital of 1,000,000 yen. This was reorganized as the Kaigai Kogyo Kaisha, which owns 150,000 acres of land at Iguape and has settled over 5,000 families Various smaller enterprises are engaged in the same work. The Japanese Government, which at first confined itself to supervision, now takes a more active interest, and the Social Affairs Bureau of the Home Office asked for appropriation of 10,000,000 yen in the present budget for the encouragement of emigration to Brazil.

TO OPEN NEW AREA

Steps are also being taken by Japanese interests to open up a new area for settlement at Acara in the Amazon valley where, as reported in these columns some time ago, the State of Para has offered 2,500,000 acres of land to a Japanese corporation, the South American Development Society, which has been formed to exploit the concession. This company was floated last year with a nominal capital of 10,000,000 yen, of which 2,500,000 yen have been called up It is interested in cotton growing, and its head is Mr. H. Fukuhara, of the Kanegafuchi Spinning Company Japanese cotton interests like those Lancashire firms which are promoting cotton growing in various parts of the British Empire, foresee a day when the United States will absorb the whole cotton production of the South, and they wish to develop alternative sources of supply. The South American Development Company hopes to settle some 40,000 Japanese (10,000 families) in area in the next ten years, engaged mainly in the production of cotton.

That is how Japanese emigration to Brazil stands, and while Brazil, as Professor Hori states in the Japan Year Book for 1928, is "at present the only foreign field of activity for Japanese emigrants," it is also rue, to quote the same authority, that "Japan's position in the vast economic scheme of Brazil is still negligible." The Japanese colony of some 70,000 must be compared with a German colony estimated by the German Government to number about 1,000,000 persons; with an Italian colony of 556,000, a Portuguese colony of 433,000; and a Spanish colony of 219,000 In what may be called colonization of capital, Great Britain is far ahead of all competitors, the British investment in Brazil being nearly £270,000,000.

NO TROUBLE PROBABLE

Merely to glance at these figures is to realize that the materials of another immigration question between Japan and Brazil do not exist. Brazil is destined to be one of the great expanding countries of the century, and Argentina is in the same fortunate position. It has an area of 3,285,318 square miles as compared with the United States area of 2,973,776 square miles, and its population is 39,870,000 as compared with America's 118,628,000 A settlement of three times 15,000 Japanese a year can cause no question in Brazil. They will be welcomed, and they will contribute a valuable element to a population in which the predominant racial strains are entirely different from those found in the United States.

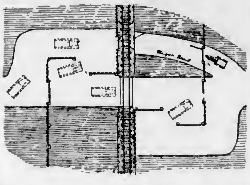
Japanese emigration is but a drop in the bucket when compared with the natural increase of population Even with 15,000 Japanese leaving for Brazil this year, Japan's total annual emigration only amounts to about one-tenth of England's, which in 1925 amounted to 174,000. The reasons are not obscure. Lands where a higher standard of living prevails, that is the United States and the British Dominions, are closed to the Japanese, and the Japanese, being still able to live in moderate comfort at home, do not emigrate in large numbers to the undeveloped lands. The natural increase, which now adds the population of two Yokohamas yearly to the number of mouths that have to be fed, presents, on paper at least, a formidable problem. It is easy to wax eloquent about "procreative recklessness" and point to the condition of China where no political change can modify the pitiful conditions under which the masses struggle against the eternal pressure of population on the means of subsistence But Japan's experience up till now has been different. Her population has doubled itself in sixty years, and her means of maintaining that population have increased even more rapidly. Every mouth born in Japan since the Restoration has brought a pair of hands with it, and the hands have been able to provide for it. No emigration scheme that could be devised could possibly cope with a natural increase of nearly a million a year. The future of the Japanese people depends on the success with which they can industrialize, manufacturing in their factories the goods which they can sell abroad in exchange for the raw materials of their industry. What lies in the future will be revealed by the future. So far as they have gone, the Japanese have solved their population problem without the aid of emigration.—The Transpacific, Tokio.

Safety Road Barrier at Grade Crossings

A DEVICE for saving lives at railroad crossings is the invention of Jehu D Bundy, of De Kalb, Texas. It provides a barrier which compels the automobile driver to stop, look and listen before he crosses a track

The idea in brief, is to form, with strong picket fences, on both sides of the railroad, pockets which will oblige the driver to make a small detour, stop at the track to readjust car control, then back through a restricted passage, and again stop before crossing a track

As the diagram shows, the motorist can get across the track in no other way. Provision for the detour is made by a widening of the highway on both sides of the railroad. The fences that extend crosswise of the highway have gates which are permanently locked, but which may be opened by keys in the possession of some official.



The diagram above shows the arrangement of the barriers placed at grade crossings to eliminate accidents of the kind shown at the top. The motorist is compelled to "Stop, Look and Listen" before he can cross the tracks.

Boys' Work Board Men

OFFICIALS of the National Boys' Work Board who are holding their annual conference in Toronto, are: (1) Taylor Statten, honorary national secretary; (2) J. R. McGregor, manager of The Halifax Chronicle and Star and president of the board; (3) D. R. Poole, national secretary; (4) George McMillan, secretary for Manitoba; (5) Wilfred Scott, secretary for Saskatchewan; (6) Gordon Lapp, secretary for Alberta; (7) Frank Fidler, secretary for British Columbia, and (8) W. C. Machum, secretary for Maritimes.

WOULDN'T TAKE MUCH ROOM

Willie had been good, and, as a great treat, his father had taken him to the museum.

"There, Willie," said his father, pointing at a lion, displayed among realistic surroundings in a glass case "Look at that big fellow What do you think of him?"

Willie gave one glance at the animal, then burst into tears.

"Take me home, daddy," he said, trembling. "I want to go home"

"Don't be afraid, Willie!" replied the fond parent. "That lion is stuffed."

"But—but he could still find room for a little boy like me!"

MAKE FAST TRIP

Two Los Angeles motorists recently drove their Studebaker sedan to York, Pa. and return in fifteen days total elapsed time They covered the 7,642 miles at the rate of more than 500 miles a day.

ANNOUNCE NEW COUPES

New Commander Coupes for two and four passengers have been announced by The Studebaker Corporation, and are available on both the Commander Six and the Commander Eight chassis.

Remarkable Growth Of Telephone Service

At the first of 1927 there were in the entire world 29,376,430 telephones, of which 60 per cent were in the United States. The number of telephones then in use in the United States was 17,746,168, and this has since mounted above 18,300,000 It is now estimated that the total number in the world tops 31,000,000

In all of Europe on January 1, last year, there were 8,080,442 telephones, less than one-half the number in the United States, and only 27.5 per cent of the total in the world. The remaining 12 per cent of the world's telephones were scattered widely over the globe in Asia, Africa, Oceania, South America and in those countries in North America outside the United States.

The figures are contained in a new compilation of telephone and telegraph statistics of the world just issued by the American Telephone & Telegraph Company and made public by H. R Risley, division commercial manager of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company, Portland. The time necessitated in obtaining the data from all the distant countries makes it impossible to present strictly comparative facts of more recent date

On January 1, 1927, the compilation revealed, there were 15.3 telephones per 100 population in the United States as compared to only 1.6 telephones per 100 population in Europe. The only country approaching the United States in point of density was Canada which, on January 1, 1927, had 12.6 telephones per 100 population China, for example, had only .03 per 100 population.

Americans also use the telephone more often than the inhabitants of any other country, according to the statistics. There were 205 telephone conversations per capita in the United States in 1926 Canada came next with 195 per capita; Germany reported 32 conversations per capita, Great Britain and Northern Ireland but 27, and France, 17.

Comparison Reveals Its Value

Our endeavor to build a thoroughly substantial six cylinder motor car at a price within reach of millions has resulted in a steadily increasing demand for the new Model 612. We invite you to study the features listed below; to examine the entire car for surplus values, and to make your own comparisons.

The New McLAUGHLIN-BUICK is the New Style

THE unprecedented popularity of the 1929 McLaughlin-Buick unquestionably establishes it as the new order of motor-car style.

The new Masterpiece Bodies by Fisher are revolutionary, it is true. Revolutionary in the majestic beauty of their appearance. Revolutionary in the richness of their contours and colours. Revolutionary in the spaciousness and sheer luxury of their interiors.

Revolutionary, in fact, in ALL the characteristics which make twice as many people choose McLaughlin-Buick as any other car at or above its price.

GAME RESERVE SURVEY PARTY MAKES REPORT

Territory Covering Fifteen Thousand Square Miles Offers Plenty of Difficulty

GREAT HERDS OF CARIBOU VIEWED

The full report of the survey of the southern portion of the Thelon game sanctuary, east of Great Slave Lake in the Northwest Territories, has been received in the Department of the Interior at Ottawa from Mr W H B Hoare, explorer of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Branch, who recently completed the work and is now engaged in an investigation of other parts of the preserve. The patrol and intensive examination of this area is being made with a view to discovering the number of musk-ox and other game animals in the 15,000-square-mile preserve, what measures should be taken for their protection, and to lay out routes and locate sites for cabins for a proposed warden service

The report relates the experiences of Mr. Hoare and his companion, Warden A. J. Knoe, of Fort Smith, N.W.T., during their trip from the base camp near the Royal Canadian Mounted Police post at Fort Reliance, at the east end of Great Slave Lake, through the preserve to the junction of the Hanbury and Thelon Rivers, and return. For eight months they were out of touch with civilization, battling against blizzards, flood, and cold, and much of the time on short rations Inaccuracies in the only available map of the region caused considerable delay and the party had to abandon a proposed visit to Baker Lake for supplies and were forced to return to the base at Fort Reliance.

OFF WITH DOGS

Mr Hoare with a dog team of six Baffin Island huskies, left Ottawa early in January, 1928. He traveled by rail to McMurray, Alberta, and there began the 800-mile journey by dog team to Fort Reliance, N W T. At Fort Smith, he was joined by Warden Knox with an additional dog team and the arduous journey to the east end of Great Slave Lake was continued. The trip was made via Resolution, where a halt had to be made for nine days to allow the dogs to recover from the strain of the journey. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police post was reached on March 5 and here a canoe shipped in the previous season was added to the equipment and carried on one of the sleds for use in Summer travel. On May 10 the first camp was pitched within the preserve on the east shore of Artillery Lake.

Cold weather, blizzards, freezing rain, and a quick thaw made travel conditions very disagreeable and the trip eastward in the sanctuary to the Ford-Campbell-Smart chain of lakes was slow and laborious. It was not until June 9 that, all supplies having been moved to Ford Lake, a start could be made by canoe eastward.

Ford Lake is reported as larger than as shown on existing maps, being approximately fifteen miles in length and having a number of deep bays. Many fish were seen in its clear water and the verdant valleys in the vicinity afford pasturage for large numbers of caribou at certain times of the year No caribou were seen in the district from the first week in June until July 20 Then a migration of at least ten thousand passed the party's camp, moving westward. Throughout the remainder of the Summer caribou were numerous in the territory passed through.

A LONG PORTAGE

A three-mile portage took the party from Ford Lake to Campbell Lake, and on July 24 the explorers started along Campbell Lake to find the arm that was supposed to connect with Smart Lake. The lake was found to be about thirty-five miles long, very irregular in shape, and with many deep arms. Two trips around the lake, careful examination of the shore line, and excursions overland failed to reveal any connection between Campbell and Smart Lakes The nearest approach of the two lakes to one another was found to be about twelve miles, the route involving sixteen portages covering a distance of nearly three miles.

The party passed through Smart Lake and proceeded down the Hanbury River to its junction with the Thelon. This point, where it had been planned to build a warden's cabin, was reached on October 19. Ice was forming in the lakes and rivers at this time. The investigators immediately started work on the cabin, but before it was completed the food supply began to run low Ice running in the rivers made it impossible to catch fish and the question of food became a serious one The investigators had to share their meagre supply with the dogs, and short-rationing was resorted to to conserve the supply, while the work on the cabin was rushed to completion.

START RETURN TRIP

On November 22 the party left the Thelon base on the return trip to Fort Reliance as it was imperative that food be soon secured. A herd of musk-ox and the tracks of a second herd were seen on the banks of the Thelon but of course the animals were not disturbed. Reaching Grove Rapids, meat in a cache there was picked up and both men and dogs recuperated their strength during the three days they were stormbound at this point. The last lap of the journey, with the food supply uncertain and weather conditions becoming worse each day, is graphically told in the following extract from the report:

"Striking overland from Grove Rapids on November 28, we reached Campbell Lake on December 1 in a blinding storm. The storm held us up for two days and the fuel oil became almost exhausted, while food ran so low that we had to exist on soup. On December 4 we pushed on to the west end of the lake and camped among some small spruce which provided us with much-needed fuel to dry out our frozen sleeping sacks and clothing.

"On December 5 the very last of our food was eaten for breakfast We crossed the three-mile portage to Ford Lake then went eight miles down the lake and found the supply cache intact. The supplies proved most welcome and the famished dogs were given e good feed. Nest morning we went on in a blizzard to the southwest end of Ford Lake and there had to take shelter in a snow bank That day about twenty caribou were seen.

"December 7 saw us again on the way The remainder of the journey to Fort Reliance was made in easy stages and we arrived at the police detachment on December 13."

After resting the dogs and securing a renewal of supplies and equipment, the party started back early in 1929 to explore other portions of the Thelon sanctuary and, it is expected, that Mr. Hoare will return to Ottawa next Autumn, coming out by way of Baker Lake and Hudson Bay.

HOW DOUGLAS FIR GOT ITS NAME

Douglas fir, the largest timber tree grown in Canada, receives its name from David Douglas, the first person to describe the tree to the scientific world. Douglas was a Scottish botanist who, just 100 years ago (he first came to America in 1823 and left this continent in 1833) spent several years in British Columbia and the Northwestern United States. During this time he discovered 150 species of plants previously unknown to science, and he introduced into cultivation in the British Isles 217 species, including the Douglas fir, the sugar pine and the redwood The Douglas fir was first discovered by A. Menzies, the surgeon of Vancouver in his voyage of discovery, but was introduced to Europe by Douglas.

MAY BE GASOLINE

It is well to know that the liquid which shows on the bayonet gauge which measures the quantity of oil in the crankcase may not be oil. Frequently, a goodly portion of it is gasoline that is seriously diluting the lubricant.

Landlady—"Your bottle of whisky is finished, sir. Shall I get you another?"

Lodger—"Well, it's about your turn, isn't it?"

HISTORY OF AVIATION

The Second Aerial Voyage of Man

Ten thousand francs collected by popular subscriptions enabled Professor Charles to build the balloon we show you today. It was twenty-seven feet in diameter and had a volume of about 1,400 cubic feet. The bag was made by two skilled mechanics, the Roberts brothers, who contributed their knowledge of how to use crude rubber in making an airtight bag. They adopted also the network arrangement over the bag to distribute the strain of the load.

The wicker basket was loaded with barometers, thermometers, ropes and anchors, notebooks and food; and the entire apparatus was held between two trees in the Tuilleries gardens for three days, during which hydrogen from twenty barrels of iron filings and sulphuric acid was poured into the bag.

The nobility and the gentry and the hoi poillu and Benjamin Franklin were among the thousands who saw the balloon start on the first day of December, 1783. Northwest it went at a fifteen-mile-an-hour clip, over the Seine, over the villages and hills and up and down at the will of the aeronaut, who released gas and ballast alternately in experiments for altitude.

The trip lasted two hours, and thirty miles was the distance covered. But the significant thing is that the operators made a big step in aviation progress by making it possible to alter their altitude at will. Two improvements were added: the network over the bag to support the basket, and the use of crude rubber for making it airtight.

CANCER NOT NEW DISEASE

Affliction Described in Writings of Ancients—Irritation a Common Cause

Cancer is an old disease. It is described in the writings of the ancients which have come down to us. Only in comparatively recent times has it been understood that the various tissues of the body are made up of one type of cell, all coming from one parent cell. Similarly, cancers arise from each type of cell and remain of that type. If the cancer begins in the stomach and spreads to the liver, the growth of the liver will resemble stomach cells, not liver cells.

Under normal conditions, the cells of the body divide, grow, mature and die. At present, we do not know what controls this process. Apparently when this control is lost or disorganized, growth occurs which, in some cases, is cancerous or malignant

There are many theories concerning the cause of cancer, which is another way of saying that there is no satisfactory or generally accepted theory. The disease is not hereditary In most cases it occurs after some sort of chronic irritation. This irritation may be mechanical and be produced by broken teeth, teeth which do not meet properly and have sharp edges, and by poorly fitting plates. The irritation may be due to a chronic inflammation, such as infected teeth or sinues, or the lining of the uterus. Habitual abuse of the stomach may produce a chronic irritation of that organ. Constipation is probably a factor in cancer of the rectum.

It has not been shown that any particular type of diet has any influence on cancer. Our present knowledge permits us to say that its prevention lies in the prevention or removal of types of irritation above referred to. By a regular health examination, these sources of infection may be found and the need for their correction pointed out, which is one excellent reason why everyone should be examined regularly by his family physician.

At present our only method of cure is by removal or destruction of the growth, once it has developed. If done early, this offers a good chance for cure. It is early treatment which, alone, is of value.

Questions concerning health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College St., Toronto, will be answered personally by correspondence.

TEA PRICES FELL DURING CROP SEASON OF 1928

In 1928 tea prices ruled at a lower level than for several years past, though the closing months of the year were marked by a recovery, a circumstance for which explanation was afforded by the improvement which occurred in the statistical positions. For the greater part of the year, however, conditions were much less favorable to producers than in 1927. The opening months of the year witnessed a complete reversal of the rising tendency in force during 1927. This was due to the rapid change for the worse in the position of stocks, which accumulated rapidly under the stimulus of the high level of values which had been established in the London market. Consequently as crop news continued favorable the price of tea declined persistently during the earlier months of 1928 and the quotation for common tea, which had been 1s 6¼d per pound at the end of November, 1927, declined to as low a point as 8¼d. The low level of values eventually exerted their usual effect on consumption, and in the second half of the year events once again moved in favor of producers, home consumption displaying expansion, while it soon became clear that direct shipments from the producing countries to foreign markets were proceeding on a considerably larger scale than in 1927.—London Times.

SHOULD USE SPARE

That the spare tire can be worn out by "a lack of mileage" is not altogether a joke as some car owners think. Putting it into service from time to time instead of waiting for a puncture or blow-out will result in sufficient discoloration to diminish the bad effects of the rays of the sun.

"Custom-Built" Designers created the new Willys-Knight "70B"

Men of long experience in the "custom-built" field designed the new-style Willys-Knight Six. Their artistry is quite apparent in this triumph of modern beauty.

Grace of line, richness of color, perfect symmetry and proportion distinguish the new-style Willys-Knight Six as the outstanding creation of these style specialists, and make available—at a remarkably low price—the style and richness previously associated only with costly, custom-built cars.

A great automobile—a great engine—no valves to grind, no costly carbon removing. Practically fool-proof and wear-proof. No Willys-Knight motor, so far as we know, has ever worn out. And to all these advantages add the fact that this car holds top place in resale value because, in terms of years, its usefulness is far beyond that of the average car.

Be sure to see the new-style Willys-Knight Six, and arrange for a demonstration at your earliest convenience.

Willys-Knight 70-B Coupe $1870, Coach $1870, Roadster $1870, Sedan, $1995, Touring $1775. Willys-Knight 56-A Coach $1570, Sedan $1695. Prices delivered Victoria fully equipped. Wire wheel equipment extra.

"New English Music Society" a Misnomer—Canadian Juvenile Trio Working Hard and Gaining Recognition—Sale of Village of West Wycombe Has Special Interest for People of Dominion—Another Great English Country House Loses Its Private Character

By ELIZABETH MONTIZAMBERT

As I listened to the excellent programme of that fashionable gathering, the New English Music Society, at the Park Lane Hotel last Tuesday, and vainly tried to grasp the meaning of the sounds composed by Syzmanowski, a startling contrast to the delicious "On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring" by Delius, I could not help reflecting that the New English Music Society was not very appropriately named. The frequency with which the conductor, Mr. Anthony Bernard, seeks the collaboration of foreign soloists is a tacit slur on the talent to be found in the British Empire.

On the previous evening Leslie Holmes, the Canadien baritone, gave the last of the series of three recitals which have been so favorably noticed by the musical critics. His programme of German lieder ranged from Schubert to Hans Pfitzner, and included a delightful little song, "Marchen," by Eric Wolff.

Among the audience which listened to Mr. Holmes' fine voice were Prince and Princess Reginald de Croy, Lady Samuelson, the Duchesse de Warenne, Lady Nanton, Mrs. Cameron, Mr. Jack Badeley, Lady Bristol, Mrs. Cazalet and Lady Goold-Adams.

Another recital that will be long remembered by those present was that given by M. de Niedzielski, a young Polish pianist who has already convinced the critics that his powers are of a very high order. In Vienna, Paris, Monte Carlo, Manchester and London, this young artist has impressed his audiences with the belief that he is a coming Paderewski, and he certainly has an amazing technique combined with a delicate interpretation and feeling for his art.

THE NELSON TRIO

Thre three little Canadians whose precocious musical ability has so impressed people over here are working hard at their piano, violin and 'cello. Herbert Walenn, director of the London Violoncello School, has invited Sarah to play a solo at the students' concert he is giving tomorrow at the Wigmore Hall, an honor sighed for in vain by many an older pupil. Last week the Nelson Trio played a special Schubert programme at the Central Foundation Girls School.

The sale of the village of West Wycombe has a special interest for Canadians, as the pretty chatelaine of West Wycombe Park is Lady Dashwood, daughter of the late Lieut.-Colonel Eaton, R.C.H.A., and Mrs. Eaton, nee FitzRandolph, of New Brunswick.

Sir John Dashwood, who has decided to sell his village, has lately deserted the Foreign Office, where he was extremely popular, in favor of the city, and he and his wife have taken a town house in Devonshire Street. West Wycombe Park is a delightful Adams mansion set in beautiful grounds with a church on the hill, too cold to be used in Winter. The Buckinghamshire village has been bought by the council of the Royal Society of Arts so as to show the public what can be done to preserve the beauty of traditional English villages. An appeal for £30,000 is being made for the purchase money and repairs.

PEPYS AND SWAKELEYS

Another great English country house is to lose its private character. Swakeleys, near Ickenham, built in Charles I's reign, has been bought by the Foreign Office Sports Association with subscriptions from past and present members of the Foreign Office, and will be used as a sort of super clubhouse in which to entertain visiting ambassadors and diplomats from other countries. Swakeley House was built in 1638 by Sir Edmond Wright three years before he became Lord Mayor of London. His daughter married Sir James Harrington and sold the place in 1665 to Sir Robert Vyner, and it was because that worthy once entertained Pepys that I discovered these facts. Pepys, who, to the joy of succeeding generations, missed very little, called Swakeleys "A very pleasant place . . . not very moderne in the garden nor house, but the most uniforme in all that I ever saw. The windowcases, doorcases and chimneys of all the house are marble." The place is only fifteen miles from Whitehall so officials of the Foreign Office pining for country air will soon be able to echo the immortal Samuel: "And so we together merrily to Swakeleys."

All England seems suddenly to have awakened to the need for preserving the beautiful places intact. Five thousand pounds is still needed to preserve Stonehenge from the invasion of the builder. These ancient stones are supposed to be some four thousand years old and may once have been part of a Druid temple where the sacred mistletoe, now so rarely found on British oaks, was venerated.

Everyone has his own pet theory about the origin of these weird stones. They range from the tale that Merlin, the wizard, transported them from Ireland by the aid of some magic word of power, to the notion that they formed a monument to Boadicea, that tragic queen of the Iceni who had the hardihood to stand up against Claudius and his legions and burn and sack St. Albans, Colchester and even London before she was conquered by Suetonius. Her story has lately been recalled by the archaeological discoveries in Norfolk of the exact site of her town, Venta Icenorum, or Caistor-next-Norwich.

THE CECIL HOUSES

The announcement that the third Cecil House is to be opened today is a shattering answer to the argument so often put forward by lethargic people that the need for some reform is too great to be tackled by the private individual. Mrs. Cecil Chesterton is a journalist who accepted a commission to see for herself the provision made for homeless women. She did it very thoroughly by playing the part for some nights, and was so horrified by the misery she saw and the difficulty the very poor find in getting a night's lodging, that she raised a fund to provide shelters for homeless, penniless women where they can find sympathy and comfort for mind and soul as well as ease for the tired body. The first two houses are, I believe, self-supporting, the third with a special annex will hold sixty women and twenty babies. For one shilling a woman can get a night's comfortable lodging with hot bath, means to wash her clothes and hot tea and biscuits. More than 51,000 beds have been occupied during the last two years, a fact that proves the need filled by this courageous woman who called the homes after her late husband, Mr. Cecil Chesterton, the well-known writer, and brother of Mr. G. K. Chesterton.

PETTICOAT LANE

Not long ago the Berwick Market was threatened with extermination, but so many protests were made that the scheme for sacrificing this convenient shopping place in the French quarter, east of Regent Street was dropped and life in Soho flowed as on usual. Now it is the turn of Petticoat Lane, the queer Jewish market on the borders of the East End, to be menaced. The real name of the lane is Middlesex Street, but as few people ever risk the dementia that comes from struggling with a map of London where the street you want is invariably missing, the official title is of little importance, as everyone knows the place as Petticoat Lane. The old clothes market held every Sunday morning, when jellied eels and other queer delicacies are enjoyed by the customers, may have to give way to rows of new flats, replacing the slums that once formed a more fitting background to the stallholders in the old market that has been one of the sights of London.

Major W. H. Hayward, the special representative of the British Immigration and Colonization Association, has received from one of the sixty boys who sailed today for Canada in the Duchess of Richmond, a letter saying: "I am looking forward to March 15 as the first stepping stone to a fortune, even if the stones are a bit slippery; but I will work for the best."

That is the spirit of the better type of Young England. These lads have been recruited from England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, and are being conducted by Mr. Harold Scarfe, of the C.P.R., to farms in Eastern Canada.

WALKING

The discussion over traffic development that occupies the minds of both the public and the authorities, has evoked a letter to the press commenting on the changing habits of the Londoner who is losing his taste for walking. We do seem to be weak creatures compared with our forefathers. One has only to open one of Dickens' novels to read of the stupendous walks his people took, and to go farther back, Pepys, whom one would not connect with any great activity, thought nothing of walking to Greenwich from Seething Lane when he could not get a boat, and having breath enough left to sing when he arrived!

Walking parties are a feature of the Summers of modern youth, but they are undertaken in solemn fashion from varied motives. One suspects that walking never occurs to them as merely a pleasant means of getting from place to place.

AMERICAN LITERATURE

That informative little leaflet, The Victoria League Monthly Notes, contains a letter from a New Brunswick woman this month which surely needs explanation. The writer, after expressing her thanks for the parcel of bound books received from the Victoria League Overseas Libraries, adds:

"I only wish we had a Canadian paper to send you once in a while, but we have none, any that I get is American. I have The Hearth and Home—they are published in the United States, so it is not really ours."

Are there no Canadian papers on sale in New Brunswick, and has the writer of this letter never heard of Canadian Homes and Gardens?"

Many other letters testify to the splendid work being done by the Victoria League in bringing books and newspapers into the homes of faraway people, to whom such things are very precious.

FELLOWSHIP BALL

The Fellowship of the British Empire, founded in 1923 to educate the peoples of the Empire in the value of economic co-operation, will give a ball next week in aid of the funds of the "League of Empire Housewives," which helps to bring home to the British housewife the knowledge of a way in which everyone can help the Empire to greater security and prosperity by "Buying British."

The Fellowship has done a good deal of good work during its brief existence. It has established boys as agricultural students, and provided groups of women teachers where needed. The ball should be a huge success, judging by the programme sent me. There will be an early morning breakfast with bacon and eggs, sausages and beer and kippers. Mrs. Simon Hartog, in whose lovely house, 46 Upper Grosvenor Street, the ball will be held, is having an additional supper room specially built to lead out of the dining room. The supper, provided by Mrs. Hartog, will be, of course, "All British," but this does not apply to the cabaret at midnight, when Georges Metaxa, the Rumanian singer, Miss Ann Penn, the American impersonator, and some Parisian artistes, appearing for the first time in London, and brought over by aeroplane, have been engaged. The Prince of Wales, as president, has promised to be present. The long list of patronesses, most of whom will bring parties, includes the Marchioness of Dufferin and Ava, the Duchess of Atholl, the Lady Violet Benson, Lady Congleton, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, Mrs. L. S. Amery, Mrs. Baldwin and Mrs. Alfred Bossom.

THE LONDON THEATRE

I have come across a little theatre quite unlike any other but certainly not to be missed by any visitor to London accompanied by a child. The Children's Theatre, at 81 Endell Street, W.C. 2, is a quaint little place, very austere, with no adornment and not much comfort in the plain black tip-up seats on a concrete floor. But the plain grey velvet curtains and the pale grey walls are a fitting background for enchantment, and that is what draws the children. The theatre dedicated to them was opened in August, 1927, with a programme of sea chanteys, folk songs, plays, etc. It is the smallest theatre in England to be licensed by the Lord Chamberlain and the London County Council, and it now puts on programmes throughout the year for a season of four weeks, followed by six weeks of fortnightly changes, after which an entirely new programme will be given. The performances begin at 5.45 p.m. and the seats cost from sixpence to five shillings and ninepence, with special arrangements for schools.

THE BEGGAR'S OPERA

The new Polly Peachum in this revival of Gay's opera at the Lyric Hammersmith, is a charming creature, Rose Hignell, who has a voice both sweet and true. Her stage parents are admirably played by Scot Russell and Elsie French, in her old part of Mrs. Peachum. Frederick Renelow has sunk MacHeath so often that he now gives the impression that he is not trying to give his best, with the result that he seems heavy and uninteresting, but the orchestra, in which the Misses Nellie, Kate and Mabel Chaplin are all playing, is quite perfect and adds much to the pleasure of the evening.

Sir Barry Jackson is presenting at the Royalty Theatre a play by Miss Adelaide Philipotts, a daughter of Eden Phillpott, whose "Farmer's Wife" had a run at the Court Theatre long enough to make any manager regard any play with the name Philipott attached with deep respect. Miss Phillpott's play, "The Mayor," is an amusing play about the reactions of a group of middle class people in a small seaside town. William Heilbronn, as the stodgy frock-coated mayor with his memorial speeches, and Isobel Thornton, as a fat, foolish mamma, and Cicely Oates, as a self-repressed hostess, and the rest of the cast, including Julian D'Albie, as a peppery admiral, and Eileen Beldon, as the feminist, were amusing in a play whose strength lay in clever characterisation and whose weakness was lack of plot beyond the trite assumption that wild beasts lurk in human beings only kept in leash by the artificialities of social life.

A commercial traveler was detained at a small town, and, missing the last train, was forced to put up at a local hotel for the night.

Being very anxious to catch the first train next morning, he summoned boots and told him to be sure and call him at six.

The boots promised, and as the clock struck, true to his word he entered the bedroom. Catching hold of the sleeper he gave him a vigorous shake, and exclaimed in a deep voice:

"Yer hour has come, sir!"

"What are you studying, John?" asked Aunt Maria.

"Economics."

"I don't see no use in studying that stuff. If it's forced on you, you gotta practice it."

MORE PACKARDS BEING DELIVERED

March Last Exceeded Same Month of Banner Year by 926 Cars

More Packard cars were delivered to customers during March than in March of any other year in the history of the Packard Motor Car Company. Deliveries totalled 5,046 cars. This exceeded March of last year, the company's banner year, by 926 cars.

Sales of cars in the latter part of the month on which deliveries had not yet been made and sales in the first few days of April indicate, — officers of the company, that this month will be an even bigger record breaker.

Last month's record and the present rate of sales, says the company, presage necessity for an increase in factory production, already unusually high at this time of the year.

"Demand for our cars," says H. W. Peters, vice-president of distribution, "has been such that our distributors and dealers in all parts of the country have not been able to build up reserve stocks which will meet the Spring demand that now is indicated.

"March is the month which gives the best indications of what the year's prospects will be in the motor car industry and the record this year is more encouraging for that reason. It is indicated most clearly now that predictions made earlier in the year that 1929 would break all records in the automobile industry, probably will be borne out with a good margin to spare."

"Learn-the-Difference"
FORTNIGHT

Come In—See—Hear—
Learn! Drive a
PLYMOUTH

Only a few days left to learn the high points of the full-size Plymouth's superiority during "Learn-the-Difference" fortnight.

Here is your chance to find out for yourself what scores of your friends and neighbors have learned — the decided difference between Plymouth and any other car in its price class.

We know that fifteen minutes behind the Plymouth wheel will convince you that Plymouth is not only different in the big obvious things, but different also in the little things that mean so much in the pleasure and convenience of driving a motor car.

NO OBLIGATION
We are eager to have you realize the many outstanding advantages of the Plymouth. Come and drive the car—see for yourself how and why it excels. There is not the least obligation. Come in today!

We know you will recognize Plymouth is a full-size car, not a miniature—in point of size and seating space it overshadows every other offer at this price.

We know you will recognize Plymouth has distinctive Chrysler-like style and manner, and richness and dignity not to be found in other low-priced cars.

We know you will recognize Plymouth is typically Chrysler in performance—so swift in traffic, so eager on hills, so easy to control and so safe with weatherproof internal-expanding four-wheel hydraulic brakes.

We could pack this whole page full of type telling why Plymouth is so vitally different—in style, quality, performance, dependability and economy. But a short five minutes' inspection followed by a brief drive will tell the story far more graphically—and completely.

That's the reason for Plymouth "Learn-the-Difference" fortnight—why we urge you to take advantage of this opportunity to learn the all-inclusive superiority of Plymouth—to see it, experience it.

Come in today! Get the facts! See us now—before the big event is over.

Famous Prisoners of the Tower of London

"The Tower Was a Place Not Easy to Leave Save by One Road Too Often Traveled"

By DORA KITTO

Europe can boast no prouder monument to antiquity than the Tower of London, built on the site of an old Roman fortress overlooking the River Thames. Only dimly can we gather any impression of its enthralling history, its ancient walls having for centuries guarded secrets which may never be revealed. Used formerly as a state prison for great offenders, its name is inseparably associated with stories of physical suffering, of aching hearts and of violent death.

The most interesting of the four chapels in the Tower are those of St. John and St. Peter ad Vincula (in chains). "In truth," says Lord Macaulay of St. Peter's: "There is no sadder spot on earth than this little cemetery." Here are buried some thirty-four persons of renown who died, or were executed, in the Tower and whose identified bodies have been recovered and marked; the names have also been recorded of those buried within the altar rails, though the exact position of their bodies is not known.

Surely no more dreadful sentence could fall on the ears of the condemned than the brief order, "To the Tower," and inmates of the ancient prison have left many a sad inscription upon those hoary walls. Among the thirty-four famous persons already mentioned, we find the names of Sir Thomas More and Bishop Fisher, both executed in 1535, and many another victim of Tudor autocracy.

FAMOUS QUEENS

Some years ago an excavating party unearthed a collection of small, fine bones identified as those of Anne Boleyn, twenty-nine years old and mother of one of England's greatest queens. Within three short years of her marriage to Henry VIII this hapless woman passed through the Traitor's Gate and emerged soon after to her place on Tower Hill. Dignified and heroic to the end, her head was severed at one blow of the executioner's sword, and as it was raised aloft the lovely eyes were still moving, the lips still framing the words of her interrupted prayers. Friends placed the body in an old arrow chest lying near by and carried it to its final resting place in St Peter's. Not inappropriately may we quote the pathetic words of the young queen herself:

"Oh Death! rock me to sleep;
Bring on my quiet rest;
Let pass my very guiltless ghost
Out of my carfful breast."

Near Anne's grave lies another victim of Henry VIII's cruelty, the little twenty-two-year-old queen, Katharine Howard. No wonder the ghost of this hapless child is said to haunt the corridors of Hampton Court, and in imagination we can hear her terrified screams as she was arrested on a trumped up and disgraceful charge and hurried to the Tower. All records of her trial and imprisonment have been deliberately destroyed, but she met her death bravely, even rehearsing the execution on the previous day. Between her grave and that of Anne Boleyn are the bodies of the Dukes of Northumberland and Somerset, guardians of the child king, Edward VI.

AGE AND YOUTH

The execution of the aged Countess of Salisbury in the previous year to that of Katharine Howard provides us with yet another scandalous episode. Refusing to admit that she was a traitor, the brave woman challenged the headsman to get her head if he could, and was chased about the platform until a stroke of the axe felled her to the ground.

On a wall in the Beauchamp Tower is the name "Jane," for Jane Grey was longer a prisoner than a queen. Learned and saintly, she suffered for the worldly ambitions of her parents, and so, at the age of seventeen died the death of a malefactor. Tying the handkerchief over her own eyes, she spread out her little hands, feeling for the block, and asked, "What shall I do? Where is it?" She, too, was laid in St. Peter's Church, but tragedy for her included the sight of her husband's body being carried from his execution on the green beyond the walls to a grave in the same church. The father of this queen, the Duke of Suffolk, was executed in the same year for his share in Wyatt's rebellion. Sir Thomas Wyatt, the elder, had been the early friend of Anne Boleyn and in the Wyatt family was a Prayer Book left for him on the scaffold by the queen. Wyatt, the younger, maintained his allegiance to Anne's daughter, Queen Elizabeth, and instigated the rebellion against her sister Mary. He was arrested at Ludgate Hill, taken to the Tower, racked and executed on the Hill in 1554, his friends securing his head from a pike, where it was displayed in Mayfair, and giving it burial.

THE LITTLE PRINCES

Among early royal prisoners was James I of Scotland, who lived in the Tower for two years, another prisoner of the period being Charles of Orleans, the master of the rondel, who was taken at the battle of Agincourt. The gentle, pious King Henry VI was stabbed to death at his prayers in the Wakefield Tower (built by William Rufus), while the Duke of Clarence, brother of Edward IV, and Richard III died in the Tower. Lord Hastings, accused of being an accomplice of Jane Shore, was hastily beheaded by Richard's order on a block of wood lying in the chapel yard, and the two little princes, his nephews, were murdered in the Bloody Tower. Their bones were discovered in the time of Charles II and buried in Westminster Abbey. Perkin Warbeck, imprisoned for rebellion and for impersonating one of the princes, vainly planned his escape from the Tower, and was hanged at Tyburn.

Among early martyrs was Anne Askew, racked and tortured for her religious convictions and later burned at Smithfield, while Ridley and Latimer were kept in the Tower for a short period on their way to the stake at Oxford. A romantic figure in Stuart times was Guy Fawkes, lodged in a cell in the thickness of the prison walls (known as Little Ease), racked, hanged and quartered.

TORTURE ABOLISHED

Colonel Felton, who murdered the Duke of Buckingham in the reign of Charles I, objected to being tortured, claiming, and rightfully, that it was illegal. He implied that a tortured man might in his agony accuse some other person untruthfully—even Archbishop Laud, his own accuser. This clever reasoning had its effect, and from that time torture was abolished.

Other notable prisoners included Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, the purifier of English poetry and a cousin of Queen Katharine Howard. He was the last victim of Henry VIII's wrath and was beheaded in 1547. Sir John Perrot, supposedly a son of this king, died in prison. Mention is also found of a sister of Lady Jane Grey, imprisoned with her husband for making a marriage displeasing to Queen Elizabeth, the fact that Elizabeth herself had been a prisoner in the Tower at the age of twenty-one apparently acting as no deterrent in favor of other persons. One of the latest of Elizabeth's victims was the young and popular Earl of Essex, who died as he had lived, bravely, and was buried in St. Peter's. For seeking the hand of Mary Queen of Scots in marriage the Duke of Norfolk was beheaded in 1572, while Sir Walter Raleigh—accused of being concerned in a plot to put Arabella Stuart (long a prisoner) on the throne—was executed at Westminster. Raleigh had been three times a prisoner and had employed some of his time in learning how to distill fresh water from salt water, and also in writing his famous "History of the World."

Sir Thomas Overbudy is mentioned in the register as having been "poysoned," and Francis, Lord Bacon, was held at the Tower for two days after his impeachment, but his imprisonment was merely nominal. During the troubles of the next reign Sir John Eliot and eight of the leading members of Parliament were thrown into prison, Eliot himself dying through foul play in 1632. The bitter feeling engendered by the schemes of Lord Strafford and Archbishop Laud contributed to the eventual imprisonment of these two men, who were both executed in the Tower, though buried elsewhere.

THE DUKE OF MONMOUTH

. Romance will always be associated with the name of James, Duke of Monmouth, the son of Charles II, and Lucy Walters. At fourteen he was married to a rich young heiress, Jane Scott of Buccleugh, aged twelve. Though the idol of the people, the Duke's rebellion against his uncle, James II, brought him to the scaffold. For political reasons his execution was public, but despite this precaution stories were long rife that he had escaped, some believing him to be the Man in the Iron Mask, who died in the Bastille in 1703. Monmouth's end was terrible. His last thoughts, his deep concern, were for the one woman he loved, Henrietta Wentworth. The vast crowd about the scaffold was deeply moved, and the executioner became so unstrung that after three ineffective blows he threw down his instrument and begged someone to finish the task. He was, however, compelled to continue, and after three more blows from the axe his work was completed. The remains were discovered in the little chapel in Queen Victoria's reign, lying face downwards near the altar, and by some strange chance Judge Jeffreys, of inglorious memory, was buried beside Monmouth, his body being later removed.

THE LAST VICTIMS

There is an inn near the Minories called "The Three Lords," supposedly named after three well-known peers, Kilmarnock, Balmerino and Lovat, who suffered imprisonment and death after the '45 rebellion. In the crypt of the church are rack, the axe and the block, with two deep scars upon it. It was last used when Lord Lovat died in 1747. The bodies of the three lords were found under a little noticed stone, discovered in the last century.

A few years before this a regiment of Highlanders, later known as the Black Watch, was ordered to march to London, and inferring that they were to be transported, the men deserted, but surrendered to the king's troops and were marched to the Tower. The three ringleaders were shot and buried outside the Chapel of St. Peter ad Vincula.

It may be of interest to note that William I introduced death by the axe, the first victim so to suffer in the Tower being Sir Simon de Burley (tutor to Richard II), and the last was another Simon, Lord Lovat. Torture by the rack was the suggestion of the Duke of Exeter in the time of Henry VI, and the instrument was nicknamed "The Duke of Exeter's Daughter."

AN ESCAPE

Escapes from the Tower have been so rare an occurrence that one, at least, deserves special mention. The Lords Derwentwater, Kenmure and Nithsdale were imprisoned after the '15 rebellion and condemned to be executed on Tower Hill. Through the courage and resource of his wife, Lord Nithsdale escaped, disguised in women's garments, and reached the Continent, his story furnishing one of the famous romances of the age.

In our own century we find two names of prisoners who became prominent—Lieut. Lodi, shot as a spy during the late war, and Roger Casement, imprisoned, tried as a traitor and hanged in Pentonville Gaol. Thousands must also have been imprisoned, tortured or done to death in the Tower in earlier days, but their names will never be known and no record of their history has been kept. With the advancing humaneness of later years such incidents could never be repeated. Assuredly they have been sufficient to make the story of the Tower of London one of the most mournful that ever has been written.

"To make money, a man has to have a special bent," says a writer. It does not follow that he must be crooked.

ARCTIC PATROLS SHOW MOUNTIES AT THEIR BEST

Stories of privations cheerfully accepted as part of the day's task, of obstacles overcome that would strike the average man as insurmountable, of heroic, arduous and devoted work, make up the annual report on the activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police tabled in the House of Commons. At the same time the report is a compendium of valuable and useful information, particularly in those sections of it that deal with the operations of the force in the Arctic and subarctic regions.

HUNDREDS OF MILES

Patrols undertaken in midwinter and extending for many hundreds of miles over the Arctic wastes of Canada's northern islands in order to enforce the law of the Dominion among the aborigines, to apprehend white men who do not scruple to vitiate the life of the Eskimos and the Indians, to relieve suffering, to distribute food and to conduct explorations all designed towards making those regions better known, are recorded in the report in simple language. The daily life of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in their isolated posts—the most northerly of which is 700 miles south of the North Pole, at Bache Peninsula in Ellesmere Land—is pictured graphically.

OUTSTANDING RECORD

Outstanding is the record of the patrol consisting of Inspector T. V. S. Wunsch, Sergeant J. R. Paton and Constable W. A. Cooper to Liard, B.C., near the Yukon border. In January, 1927, Sergeant Paton got both hands very badly frostbitten and first aid treatment, lasting four hours, partially restored circulation. Sergeant Paton was nursed day and night for three months until the use of his hands was almost fully restored. However, it is recorded that "in the course of treatment gangrene set in at the extremity of one little finger, and, with the patient's consent, the last joint was amputated with a razor by Inspector Wunsch, there being no doctor anywhere in the district." The report says that "our men went out of their way to render help and succour to all, from assisting an Indian mother to bring a baby into the world to reading the Lord's Prayer at burials."

The First Cat Tamed

I never heard of anybody sighing because they had come into the world too late to have seen the first movements of Puffing Billy, or heard the first telephone bell, but I have encountered a man who says he would willingly have surrendered his modernity in order to be the first owner of a tame cat.

Here is a marvel indeed—a toy tiger, bringing the jungle about us as it steps delicately on our silk cushions and invoking amusing ghosts of primitive human terrors. If we had no domestic cats, but were driven like the poor Romans to have "night-wandering weasels" prowling the house to attend to the mice, we should be thrilled at the report of one, yet we are thrilled by cats still, though they are often the first object we "notice," as the nurses say, often the last marvel to divert us as they pad over a bed before dying eyes.—Edith Shackleton, in The London Evening Standard.

ERSKINE "6" REPLACES DOGS

An Australian motorist is sponsor for a new sport. Finding the usual method of hunting kangaroos with dogs a bit slow, he chases the animals cross country with his Erskine Six and lassos them from the running board.

The best way to look at life is with a little humor, a lot of pity, a ceaseless curiosity, a love of beauty and a sense of comradeship with all men.

11. B Q 3	11 P K N 3
13. P x P	12 N x P
13. Castles	13. B N 5

The quieter 13. ...., B Q 3, followed by Q R B 1, would have admitted of his playing N K 5 without the White Q being able to go to Q R 4, and Black would then have obtained full possession of the Q B file.

WHITE	BLACK
14 N Q 4	14. Q R B 1
15. Q R B 1	15. Q N 4

Now if 15. ...., N K 5; 16 Q R 4 !

WHITE	BLACK
16 K R K 1	15. K R K 1 ?
17. B N 5	17 K R Q 1
18 B B 1	18 Q K B 3
19. P Q N 3	19 P Q R 3 ?
20 Q x N	20 R x Q

A bold and enterprising course, the probable consequences of which White has judged admirably. He can no longer be deprived of exclusive possession of the Q B file, and his N is unassailable. He reckons that the defence of Black's weaker Pawns will induce other weaknesses, which will enable him to augment still further his positional advantage. Nevertheless the combination should have produced no more than a draw.

21. R x R	31. Q Q 3

The paramount consideration for Black is the mobility of his Rook, which will be lost once White has doubled Rook's unchallenged. The correct play, therefore, was 31. .... R Q B 1; 22. R x R, B x R; 23. R B 1, Q Q 1. Now there is no entry for the White Rook, and without that no winning prospects. On the other hand, White's own position would be about equally unassailable.

22. K R B 1	22. B Q 3
23 B K 3	23. K N 3

The remaining moves are with the diagram at the head of the column.

CHESS NEWS AND NOTES

England — University Matches—The fifty-third annual contest, Oxford and Cambridge, ended in a draw at 3½ all. Cambridge has now won 25, Oxford 36 and 3 draws. All the games upheld the sporting traditions of these contests. A feature was the absence of the Queen's Pawn opening, so prolific in dull, featureless draws. Milner Barry, the light blue captain, opened with the very complex and beautiful Vienna opening, which abounds in opportunities for brilliant combinations, but he overlooked a simple fork of his K and Q by a Kt. A Petroff, a French Defence, an East Indian, a Two Knights Defence, a Bird's Opening, and in No 7 a Rup Lopez, won by Hartness, of Cambridge, who only learned chess in the last nine months, and The London Times says: "By securing a place in the inter-university team must have set up a record for earning that place in such a short time."

Board No. 3 kept the "gallery" on the tip-toe of excitement, and the game would have won a brilliancy prize if there had been one. The match, although a draw, kept the hosts (the London Chess Club) in a state of excitement for five hours.

The Combined Universities defeated the Insurance team by 8 to 7; lost to the Hampstead Club by 6½ to 13½; lost to the London C.C. by 5 to 13, and lost to the West London by 5 to 9.

The Ramsgate Team Tournament. The foreign team won from the British by 32½ to 15½. Capablanca won 5½, lost 1½; he won 4 and drew 3. Miss Menchik and Akiba Rubenstein, each 5-3; they won 3 and drew 4. Koltanowski and Maroczy, 4½ 3½ each; Snosko Borowski and Soultanbeieff, 4-3 each. The sensation of the meet was the play of Miss Vera Menchik, who topped her tutor, Geza Maroczy by ½ a game. Sir George Thomas was top scorer for the losers at 3½-3½; he won 3, lost 3 and drew 3; Yates, the British champion, was 3-4.

An entertaining display by living chessmen marked the opening of the congress. The pieces were local schoolboys. They moved on a green and yellow squared carpet board, their movements being directed by the two players, who sat on high chairs similar to those used by umpires in tennis tournaments. The smaller boys wore berets to indicate they were Pawns, while the bigger boys wore headgear indicative of their rank. The first game, between Major Montague Jones and Lord Dunsany, was won by the latter in 27 moves. In the second game Capablanca beat Sir George Thomas in 54 moves, and in the third Miss Vera Menchik lost to B. H. Lohmann, a local school teacher, in 29 moves.

London Chess League — The championship was won by Battersea by the fine score of 11 out of 12. Results of recent matches: North London, 13; Lewisham, 7; Hampstead 15½; Highbury, 4½; Brixton, 12 North London, 8, Hampstead, 14½, Athenaeum, 5½; Lud-Eagle, 13½; Leyton, 6½.

Midlands—Manchester again beat Leeds in an eighteen-board match by 10½ to 7½. An unusual feature was the first nine boards produced draws.

Scotland—The Richardson Cup has been won by the Glasgow Central for the third time, beating the Glasgow C.C. by 5½ to 1½ in the final. The Spens Cup fell to the Bohemians C.C., beating the Pollok C.C. by 5½ to 1½.

Ireland—Armstrong Cup — The Blackrock C.C. won from Dublin University by 6-2. MacDonogh won from Professor Thrift on top board, and the winners won on the first five boards.

United States—Dr. Norbert Lederer announces a masters' tournament at Bradley Beach at the new Hotel La Reine from June 3 to 13 under his direction. Dr. Alechin, who will have returned from his Western tour by then, has consented to play. Others invited to meet the world champion are: F. J. Marshall, A. Kupchik, A. Kevitz, Lajos and Herman Steiner, F. K. Perkins and H. R. Bigelow. It is hoped also that Ed. Lasker, J. H. Morrison, of Toronto, and Rafael Citron, of Porto Rico, may be able to accept. Leonard B. Meyer will be referee and Julius Finn judge of brilliancy prizes, two having been given by S. Van Dine, the author.—New York World.

Inter-Collegiate Championship—P. R. Chevalier, of Harvard, won the title by defeating T. H. Vance, captain of the Yale C.C. and also D. C. Forbes, of the Princeton University C.C.. This is the champion's second win. Frank J. Marshall umpired.

The Bell Telephone Co., of New York, beat the Western Electric, of Chicago, by 5 to 4 in the annual ten-board match.

Lajos Steiner, of Budapest, gave a simultaneous exhibition at the Rice Progressive C.C. against a strong team of 14, winning 11, drawing with Clompoos and losing to Secker and Kabat.

Capablanca's Larger Board and New Pieces—A valuable suggestion in reference to the modification of the royal game, in order to obviate repetition of stereotyped lines of play in matches and tournaments and to reduce the number of drawn games to a minimum, is made by Mr. C. G. Schroeder, of California, in The American Chess Bulletin. He proposes to ballot all the new openings and most of the old ones. Six moves for both Black and White in the order in which these opening moves are to be played to be printed and cut, one card taken from the top of the deck and turned face up, denoting the opening to be played, each player to play both sides of the opening before the next card be turned face up.

A committee of ten of the leading players of the world to select these standard openings and determine by agreement the number of openings to be included in this system of restriction. The writer fortifies his system with a panoply of valuable suggestions and safeguards.

THE BIDDING

Auction Bidding—South (Dealer) one Spade. West, one No Trump. North, four Diamonds; East, four Hearts, all pass.

Contract Bidding—Same as above

SALIENT POINTS OF THE BIDDING

South—It should be noted that South would not have a sound original Spade bid but for his compensating side King. West—West bids No Trump in preference to doubling negatively because of the 4-3-3-3 distribution of his hand. With the same high-card strength and a different distribution, particularly with more than three small Hearts, West would preferably have doubled North—North's pre-emptive bid of four Diamonds over the one No Trump was an obvious attempt to shut out a Heart take-out by East. East—East's holding is more than sufficient to warrant the Heart overcall. The bidding principles here enunciated are the same in Auction and Contract.

THE PLAY

South opens the King of Spades, which Declarer wins with Dummy's Ace. In counting his probable losers, East sees clearly that he can go game by conceding the adversaries a Heart and two Spade tricks, as he can discard his losing Diamond on a good Club in Dummy. Therefore at Trick 3 he leads a Heart from Dummy and declines the finesse, prepared to lose his Heart trick at once. South wins the Heart return and takes his two Spade tricks and then, whatever he leads, Declarer gets in, draws the adverse trumps and takes the rest of the tricks. Had Declarer finessed, South, upon winning, would have led two high Spades, upon which North could have discarded his two Clubs. North's ruff of a Club on the next lead, followed by South's ruff of a Diamond, would have set the contract two tricks.

FOREST FIRES ARE REVIEWED

Situation in 1928 Regarded as Having Been Satisfactory, Says Ottawa Report

The forest fire situation in Canada during 1928 may on the whole be considered as having been satisfactory. There were marked contrasts in fire hazard conditions between the Eastern and Southern portions of the Dominion and the Northwestern areas. Although the compiled weather bureau records show that last year was the wettest with one exception in thirty-nine years, nevertheless drought conditions of almost unparalleled duration prevailed in a wide belt extending from Northwestern Ontario across the northern parts of Manitoba and Saskatchewan into Alberta. In this area the normal hazard was greatly increased by the travel resultant from the extensive mining activity.

During the calendar year 1928, 4,259 fires were reported in Canada. These burned over an area of 1,347,170 acres, causing a total gross damage and loss of $1,328,950. The latter figure is an improvement over the previous low record year of 1927, even though the total area burned over last year greatly exceeds the 1927 figure.

The following table, compiled by the Forest Service, Department of the Interior, from returns made by the different forest authorities, gives in detail the figures for the year 1928 (subject to further slight revision), as compared with the average for the five-year period 1924-28, inclusive.

Item	1928	Average 1924-1928 Incl
Total number of fires	4,260	4,884
Total area burned over (acres)	1,347,170	1,506,300
Merchantable timber—
Area burned (acres)	317,461	316,903
Timber burned (M ft. B.M.)	384,580	1,456,433
Estimated stumpage value	$ 417,883	$2,538,087
Young growth—
Area burned (acres)	374,158	463,714
Estimated value ..	$ 308,415	$ 627,778
Cut-over—
Area burned (acres)	80,621	172,287
Estimated value	$ 40,995	$ 104,992
Non-forested—
Area burned (acres)	574,134	544,412
Other property burned—
Value	$ 147,288	$ 509,687
Actual cost of fire fighting	$ 308,365	$ 673,480
Total gross damage and loss	$1,328,950	$4,483,581

MARITIME PROVINCES

In New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, conditions were similar. A total of 234 fires occurred which burned over an area of 5,451 acres, resulting in a combined loss of $3,422, the lowest on record for these provinces. This comparatively negligible loss is attributed to the favorable wet season which prevailed, the permit system in vogue, increased effectiveness of the protective organizations, and a growing appreciation on the part of the public of the need of forest conservation.

QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

In Quebec, all previous records were broken by the small number of fires which occurred and the low fire losses sustained. This province benefited undoubtedly by a favorable wet season. Nevertheless, the fire protection organization, working in conjunction with the several fire protective associations, was successful in extinguishing numerous fires in the incipient stage.

In Ontario, although the area burned over was nearly three times as great as in 1927, 86 per cent of the losses occurred in the Patricia district in the northwestern portion of the province and largely beyond the aerial patrol system. This region experienced a particularly prolonged dry period, and 85 per cent of the fires which occurred are attributable to the camp fires of prospectors.

The total number of fires in Quebec and Ontario last season was 831. The total area burned was 106,915 acres, by far the greater part being in Northwestern Ontario.

PRAIRIE PROVINCES

In the southern portions of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, favorable weather prevailed, whereas in the northern forest areas of these provinces exactly the opposite conditions obtained. On the whole, Alberta reports a fairly satisfactory season. No timber was destroyed south of the latitude of Edmonton, but a number of serious fires occured north of that point, chiefly in the settled districts. Manitoba and Saskatchewan each experienced one of the severest fire seasons on record. This was due to the light snowfall of the previous Winter followed by a prolonged drought which lasted from April to December in the northern forest areas, and to the presence of thousands of prospectors, attracted by the extensive mining development in this region. Neglected camp fires accounted for the majority of the outbreaks which occurred. In all, 1,050 fires were reported in the Prairie Provinces which burned over an area of 1,109,881 acres. More than half of this consisted of non-forested areas. Nevertheless, the total damage to timber and young growth amounted to $708,521. The fire season was exceptional in that it continued from April to the end of December, during which period outbreaks were being continually reported which required suppression action. In these extensive northern areas aircraft offer the only efficient means of fire protection, and it was chiefly due to the excellent service rendered by aircraft that numerous outbreaks were detected in the incipient stage and controlled before great damage occurred.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

In British Columbia the high temperature and lack of precipitation from early May until late September created a fire hazard which required constant attention of the forest protective organizations in this province. In all, some 3,144 fires were reported, 80 per cent of which were extinguished in the incipient stage. The total area burned over was 123,913 acres and involved a total loss and damage of $271,185, which is slightly in excess of the figure for the previous year. Favorable reports were received from this province of cooperation given by organized industry and also of an increased appreciation on the part of the general public of the efforts of fire-fighting organizations.

PAIN

YOU have, no doubt, used Aspirin for a headache and you know how very promptly and completely it relieves the pain. But until you try it for some deep-seated pain such as neuritis or neuralgia you will not know its full effectiveness. Try using it to ward off a summer cold, or to break-up a cold that has a start. Or use it as a gargle for sore throat or tonsilitis. Then you'll realize why millions of users depend on it. These tablets are utterly harmless, as any doctor will tell you. Every drugstore has the genuine product, with Bayer on the box and on each tablet.

Morgan Melton, the financial genius, arrived in a small market town for a well-deserved rest. Immediately the local paper sent up a young man to interview him.

"What are you going to do while you are here?" asked the reporter.

"Rest," said Morgan Melton.

"What exactly do you mean by rest?"

"Rest," said Morgan Melton.

"If you see any other financiers in this country, what will you discuss?"

"Rest."

"One question more. What is your advice for young men in my position?"

"Rest, young man—rest! And by all means, begin at once!"

A FAITHFUL DOG

The following story is written by a girl of ten, whose schoolmistress vouches for the facts:

"We once had a little Pomeranian dog whose name was Peter, and he was black. When my Uncle Hubert died, Peter, who loved him very much, used to go and lie down by his grave in the country churchyard every day. And once the sexton found a bone placed on uncle's grave; he was very angry and complained to mother. On inquiry they found that Peter had placed it there, evidently as an offering."

WAR WORK OF PIGEONS TOLD IN NEW BOOK

Lieut.-Colonel in Charge of Birds Gives Graphic Account of Wonderful Performance of Carriers

SOME FEATHERED HEROES WIN V.C.

Shot Down Outside Ypres No. 2,709 Lay in Rain All Night and in Morning Struggled Home to Die

HOW pigeons helped to win the Great War is graphically recorded in book form by Lieutenant-Colonel A. H. Osman. In "Pigeons in the Great War," just published, Colonel Osman gives a complete history of the carrier-pigeon service from 1914 to 1918 He tells a wonderful story of the amazing work of these birds, the careful organization of which proved an invaluable aid to the fighting forces.

The extent and usefulness of the service, as the writer points out, will be realized by the fact that towards the end of the war 150 British mobile pigeon lofts were in active service on the French and Italian fronts. The author himself accepted the command of the first carrier-pigeon service in the British army only on condition that he should work without payment.

A red chequer cock pigeon, known as Crisp, V.C., became one of the heroes of the naval messenger service Crisp, V.C., was placed on the trawler Nelson. Many pigeons were placed on North Sea minesweepers at the beginning of the war, as these vessels had no other means of keeping in touch with the base.

"When the skipper of the trawler Nelson was attacked by a U boat," writes the author, "he defied the Germans and fought his ship to the last. Lying mortally wounded on the deck he scribbled a hasty message which was sent off by this pigeon. This was the last act before he died. The pigeon carried it to a vessel in the vicinity and help was sent to the trawler crew. It arrived to save the rest of them from death. Between 500 and 600 owners were awarded certificates for the meritorious performances of the birds they lent for naval purposes."

Still more wonderful was the work of the pigeons attached to the military services. In the defence of Verdun pigeons proved their great value, and were eventually the only means of communication for this front when all other means had failed . . ."

Five thousand of the birds were used by the French alone in the battle of the Somme Another valuable use for them was the carrying of messages from advancing tanks to the attacking forces.

Pigeons attached to the Intelligence Service were dropped into Belgian and French territory occupied by the Germans . . . and a request was made to the finder to supply intelligence information that was needed, at the same time giving the finder hopefulness and cheer as to the ultimate success of the Allies' cause . So alarmed did the Germans become at its success that they took every possible means to detect those who had the courage to send messages No 2,709 was awarded the V.C in our own pigeon service, and its remains are to be seen preserved in the United Services Museum This bird was with our forces at Menin Road, October, 1917 She was dispatched with a message from the front line to Divisional Headquarters nine miles away early in the afternoon She was shot down by the enemy soon after liberation, laid out in the rain all night, but the next morning sufficiently recovered to struggle back with her message, and staggered on the floor of the loft and died before the officer could remove the message holder from her leg.

RICH BABIES' CLUB

Unique Organization at Chelsea Would Give Offspring of Wealthy "Better Care"

It is now possible for a young English aristocrat to start in at a very early age on a career as a fashionable clubman In fact, before he is out of his nurse's arms he may become a member of a club of upper-class English babies which has recently been organized It occupies an entire house in Chelsea and has an inviting garden, where socially prominent babies may promenade, or, if the spirit moves them, play about in sand piles or even make mud pies. A great deal of attention has been given to organizations to promote better care, feeding and recreation for poor babies. But small notice has been taken of the poor little rich babies The object of the new club is to provide an opportunity for them to associate with their equals—to give them a community life which wealthy babies, watched over by vigilant nurses, often lack.

SAVINGS INCREASE

Economist Refers to Wonderful Increase in Savings of Britons Disclosed by Returns

Referring to the published report of the savings of working-class people in Great Britain Dr. L. Haden Guest, economist, in an address given in Manchester recently stressed the fact that the total has increased enormously. At the end of 1927 savings bank accounts totalled £284,000,000, and at the close of 1928 the figure was increased by £4,000,000, he said. At no previous time had there been so large an amount invested by small investors in Government stock throught the Post Office Savings Bank In 1912 there were 182,969 holdings, the amount held being £26,000,000 and the average holding being £143. In 1927 the holdings numbered 2,134,418, the amount totalling £188,000,000 and the average holding being £88. This indicated that people of smaller means were investing in larger numbers, said Dr. Guest. In the building societies in 1912 there were 607,721 members. In 1926 the number of members was 1,257,400 In the face of such figures, Dr. Guest insisted, it could not be said that there was increasing poverty in Great Britain.

LONDON BUILDS WORKERS' FLATS

New St. Pancras Building to Reduce Congestion Where 12,000 Families Live in Single Room Each

MANY HISTORIC PLACES DISAPPEAR

The highest municipal building in London is being rapidly constructed. It has been planned by Topham Forrest, chief architect of the London County Council, following his visit to the United States, and is situated about three minutes' walk away from St. Pancras railway station.

These new flats for the working classes are situated in the midst of some of the most congested house property in London. It is said that in this district out of a population of 250,000, 12,000 families live each in one room

St. Pancras has been a pioneer in many social reforms, and the new housing tenements represent an attempt in Great Britain to emulate some of the housing flats in America, although the maximum height allowed by the London Building Act is eighty feet plus two stories in the roof.

The first block should be occupied in four months' time. This will vary from three to six stories in height and will contain eighty-seven working class tenements.

This area of London is full of historical memories. One of the streets recently cleared of slums derives its name from Sir John Wolcot, who wrote poems in the reign of George III under the name of "Peter Pindar," while Charles Dickens lived as a boy in a street that is to be demolished under the St. Pancras Borough Council's slum clearance scheme.

Scotland Yard Changes

So far the Scotland Yard "casualties" resulting from Lord Byng of Vimy's command of London police have been forty-seven dismissals and 122 compelled resignations "for the sordid offence of corruption."

HIGH HOPES FOR NEW LOCOMOTIVE

Railway Engine Building in England Promises Great Economies in Operation

A new railway engine which is expected to revolutionise steam railway engines the world over is now approaching completion at Gainsborough, England It is claimed that the size of the cylinders now in use can be reduced by one-quarter and that wastage of steam by condensation and back pressure in the cylinder upon the advancing piston will be completely eliminated.

According to its designer and manufacturer, J T. Marshall of Marshall, Son & Co., railway companies will be able to make a very large saving in operating costs alone It is, moreover, asserted that it will only cost $5,000 to convert existing locomotives.

"In the present engines," says Mr Marshall, "steam is so badly 'wire-drawn,' technically speaking, that there is an extraordinary loss of power, which with fuel and running costs amounts to thousands of pounds of waste every year."

The development of a more powerful locomotive, however, came as a surprise to the majority of engineers in England, for not long ago the opinion was freely expressed that railway engines had reached their maximum development Bridges and tunnels precluded wider and taller engines and the weight of making longer engines was considered by experts to be impossible beyond the limits already reached on account of danger from the increased load on the roadbed

Marking Anniversary of Battle of Ypres, 1915

DEDICATION OF MENIN GATE MEMORIAL

This monument was erected in 1927-28 to the memory of the thousands of British soldiers who took part in the struggle for "the Salient" and who now sleep in unknown graves. April 22 is "Ypres Day," the battle having been fought in 1915. The capture of Vimy Ridge by the Canadian Corps took place on April 9, 1917.

PRINCESS ELIZABETH

Little Friends Entertained at Farewell Party at Craigwell House

Craigwell House and its grounds resounded with childish laughter one afternoon recently, when Princess Elizabeth gave a farewell party before returning to London. The guests were the five children of the Duchess of Rutland, who are staying with Lady Diana Cooper at West Lodge, close to Craigwell House, and they spent the whole afternoon playing with the little Princess. They all had tea together in the big room which has been used as a nursery.

Chief of the many attractions of the ground seemed to be the sand pit which the queen has had dug and filled with sand from the seashore From his window the King could see the children playing.

HIT UNIVERSITIES' CLASS TEACHINGS

Cambridge Union Condemns Present System and Asks for Reorganization

England's three leading universities each recently contributed unusual items to the news Perhaps that from Cambridge has caused the most surprise After a warmly contested debate the Union decided by two votes that the present system of education perpetuated class distinction and demanded reorganization on a national basis. The result is the more noteworthy from the fact that Dr Cyril Norwood, the popular and well-known headmaster of Harrow, made a strong speech in opposition to the resolution.

At Oxford a young American, Brewster Morgan, has been elected president of the Oxford Union Dramatic Society A correspondent writing from Oxford to The Sunday Times speaks of "Brewster Morgan, whose production of 'Othello' evoked from Oxford as a whole the highest praise, and from certain London papers the most inept criticisms have been lavished on an O.U.D.S. production for some time."

The third item is the announcement that King's College of the University of London has made President Masaryk a fellow of the college

CONSERVATIVES LEAD

Straw Ballot to Test Flapper Vote Shows Third of Million Already Cast

Over 251,000 women have now cast their votes in the straw ballot being carried on by a London newspaper. Figures prove that the success of this inquiry into the political views of the new voters has surpassed all expectations. Women in all parts of England, Scotland and Wales have welcomed the ballot with extraordinary enthusiasm. The latest totals are as follows Conservatives, 137,584 votes; Socialists, 121,806 votes; Liberals, 92,003 votes Thus far the Conservatives have maintained their lead.

REOPEN IRISH COPPER MINES

Rich Veins of Ore Developed in Ancient Days and Abandoned Attract American Mining Syndicate

LOW-GRADE VEINS NOW AVAILABLE

In mediaeval times Irish metal workers used to make beautiful ornaments from native copper, but when rich veins of ore were discovered in the New World the mines were abandoned. This age of electricity and automobiles has found a thousand new industrial uses for copper, and demand is outstripping the world's supplies Copper prices which lately were almost advancing daily in New York and London, stimulated a search for new supplies of ore.

Under these circumstances an Anglo-American syndicate is preparing to reopen some of the Irish mines. They are beginning operations at the long-deserted Ovanary mine in the Wicklow hills, and expect to be employing a thousand men by the end of this year.

Modern methods will be used to extract the metal from the thousands of tons of low-grade ores regarded as worthless for smelting by former exploiters of the mine These ores also contain lead, silver and traces of gold, but if any fortunes are made out of the Wicklow hills they will have their basis in the red metal indispensable to modern industry.

LONDON FOGS ABATE

"Summer Time" and Artificial Light Curtail Coal Consumption and Clear Atmosphere of City

One of the sights of London—the pea soup fog—is gradually vanishing and some day it may be seen no more, for the annual sunshine records for Westminster, covering the past eleven years, show that Central London now averages twenty-two minutes more sunshine per day than during the previous four decades The improvement is attributed mainly to the increased use of gas and electricity and to the consequent abatement of the smoke nuisance. Often it is not so much fog as the smoke, from millions of chimneys, imprisoned by low lying clouds, that causes London's midday night. The daylight saving plan has also helped for "Summer time" has reduced the need for artificial light and heat between April and October ever since 1916.

A FINE SUMMER?

"Cumberland dalesmen, observing that rooks are building their nests higher in the trees this Spring, say that the Summer will be as fine and as long as the Summer in the Jubilee year," writes a correspondent to The Manchester Guardian.

OLYMPIA SOLD

Plans for Rebuilding Would Make Site Finest Exhibition Centre in World

Olympia, London's largest hall, and the home of exhibitions, has changed hands. The new owner is Mr. Phillip E Hill, of King Street, St. James, S.W The vendors are Olympia (1912), Ltd Plans have been prepared to remodel the building and make important extensions. "The Prince's speech on salesmanship was an important factor in my decision to buy, extend and improve Olympia," declared Mr. Hill. "His clear and definite call to business men came at a moment when I was considering the purchase, and, coupled with my own consultations with manufacturers, all of whom took the same view as the Prince, it helped me quickly to make up my mind. Olympia I hope to make the finest trade exhibition centre in the world As such it is bound to be one of the best possible practical schools of salesmanship." Mr. Hill, who was born at Torquay, was many years in business at Cardiff In 1927 he bought Lord Derby's Liverpool and Bootle estate for £1,750,000, and he is chairman of the Covent Garden Properties Company, Ltd.

SIR IAN HAMILTON ON EMPIRE'S NEEDS

Famous General Stressed Added Requirements of Britain's Flying Forces

General Sir Ian Hamilton, speaking at the 114th anniversary dinner of the Royal Caledonian Schools, said that this nation wanted to do its bit in ushering in the millennium and, considering the unexampled extent and responsibilities of the Empire, had gone farther in that direction than any other of the Allied powers. Great Britain had given up her claim to the mastery of the seas, had cut down the army by £22,000,000 in the last seven years, and in the air, counting heads and machines, was now a fifth-rate power The nation was really gambling pretty heavily upon the good faith of its neighbors and the good behavior of its fellow-citizens in the Near and Middle East. Instead of showing signs of discouragement the officers and men of the navy and the army had turned with a will towards the task of raising what had been left them to a considerably higher standard of fire power and manoeuvre power than was possessed by the numerically more powerful forces of a few years ago Having resigned the mastery of the sea, Britain must take to the tank and the aeroplane. The nation should have sixty and not six air squadrons associated with the Territorials Vision, courage and faith were needed to bring Mother Britain up to date.

Singapore Dock

Construction of the Singapore naval base begins this month, Sir John Jackson, Limited, the contractor, having completed plans under the $38,000,000 award The machinery has cost $4,000,000.

ELDERS COACH FLAPPER VOTE

School of Political Instruction Organized to Teach Newly Enfranchised Women Has Good Results

TO JUSTIFY FAITH OF THEIR COUNTRY

A training school for "flapper voters" has been formed in London by a group of their own number, and many hundreds of city girl clerks and typists are nightly preparing for their first trek to the polls. At the headquarters of the Junior Women's Branch of the City of London Conservative Association a complete curriculum of practical politics has been mapped out for them. There is no entrance fee.

The Junior Women's branch was formed last year by serious-minded "flapper voters" as an answer to disparagements cast upon them by opponents of the measure which extended the vote to 5,250,000 women less than thirty years old. These "flappers" insisted that they were going to justify the faith the country had placed in them. The organization of the school is one of the expressions of this determination

The women over thirty who have held the franchise since the war are taking a friendly interest in their younger sisters For the benefit of hungry girls who come to the school immediately after leaving their work about six o'clock, the "Over Thirties" have instituted an informal half-hour of talk and rest during which coffee and biscuits are served before the serious work of the evening is commenced. All classes and lectures are over by eight o'clock

"The success of the Junior Women's branch has exceeded our wildest expectations," stated Mrs Woodrow, secretary of the Association. "Some of the girls who have taken our public speaking courses have become really brilliant speakers and are doing good work in addressing other meetings."

SEEK GIANT EELS

Expedition at Auckland to Study Habitat of Big Snake-Like Fish

The Danish research ship Dana is at Auckland, New Zealand, to search for the unknown origin of the gigantic eels of the Pacific Ocean These eels grow to thirty or forty pounds in weight, compared with a maximum of about ten pounds in European waters Dr. Johannes Schmidt who, in twenty-five years of study, did much to explain the origin and habits of the Atlantic Ocean eels, heads the Danish expedition. No eels appear along the Pacific shores of North America. Dr Schmidt suggests this may be due to the extreme cold of the deep currents, even in tropical latitudes A dozen eel species are known in the Pacific.

"DAVID COPPERFIELD"

Appeal for Preservation of "Blunderstone" Church Made Famous by Charles Dickens

"The parish church of Blundeston, in Suffolk, is badly in need of repair, and a movement is on foot to restore it in memory of Charles Dickens and 'David Copperfield.' To the lovers of Dickens this little movement should make an irresistible appeal. No commentator, so far as I know, has ever seriously disputed that Blundeston is the place," says a writer in Truth, "thinly disguised as 'Blunderstone,' that Dickens had in his mind as the scene of David Copperfield's early childhood, or that its 'Rookery,' the birthplace of his hero, was the present parsonage."

STEAM CIG-LIGHTER

Royal Institution of Great Britain Given Demonstration of Latest Invention

A method of lighting a cigarette with steam was demonstrated recently before the Royal Institution of London. High pressure steam, hot enough to set fire to shavings and cigarettes, was produced by the experimenter, who explained that the steam which escapes from a tea kettle is not, strictly speaking, real steam. By the time it emerges it has condensed into tiny drops of liquid and has ceased to be steam in the true sense Real water steam is an invisible gas.

PLAN GORGEOUS JEWELRY SHOW

Display of National Association at Newcastle Beauty Exhibition Promises Unusually Rich Spectacle

PRINCE OF WALES TO OPEN FESTIVAL

Secret plans are now being made in London for a jewel display in the north of England which will outrival Aladdin's cave.

This collection of precious gems, jewelry and silverware is to be lent by the National Jewelers' Association of Great Britain, and will be seen at the Beauty Exhibition which forms part of the North-East Coast Exhibition to be opened by the Prince of Wales at Newcastle on May 14

Included in the display will be historical gems and silver ware, as well as a wonderful collection of modern jewelry worn by living models.

There will be silverware representative of the work of British craftsmen from the reign of Queen Anne to the present day, one of the most striking exhibits of modern work being the famous porringer presented by the association to Queen Elizabeth, and which the Duchess of York is lending specially.

Visitors will be able to study the growth of pearls. Pink, black and white pearls will be seen from their earliest formation in the shell of the oyster to their final stage

Side by side with modern brooches and rings there will be the miniatures rimmed with diamonds with which old-world women pinned their lace frills, poison rings of the type used by the Borgias, ancient toe and thumbnail rings, and, most interesting of all, a huge thumb ring of rock crystal—the Urim and Thummim of the Bible, by means of which ancient priests claimed to discern the Divine will

CO-OPERATION IN PUNJAB SUCCEEDS

Governor of Province Commends Pioneers of Movement Who Started Good Work

The Governor of the Punjab in replying to an address of the Co-operative Societies of the Jullundhar district, described the rural conditions in that portion of India twenty-five years ago, and he added that no praise was too high for the courage, sanity and energy of the pioneers of the movement who won their way through the barriers and obstruction of hostility, morasses of ignorance and prejudice, and the dangerous ravines of apathy, inertia, and lack of faith, and which movement has now begun to change the whole face of the economic and social conditions in rural Punjab.

The pioneers had seen the scope of the movement expand from the economic to the social field Its leaven had begun to work in industrial as well as agricultural conditions, and today, the Governor concluded, the movement stood by itself in the Punjab as a prime mover among the great nation-building forces of the Province.

"LET ETON FLOURISH"

Council Declares War on Mosquitoes With Campaign Fund of Twenty Five Dollars

Eton Rural District Council have decided to wage war on mosquitoes complaints of this plague having come from all parts of the district The Medical Officer of Health and the Sanitary Inspector have been authorized to open the campaign of slaughter at an expenditure not exceeding £5.

AUSTRALIA TO DEVELOP AS BEEF COUNTRY

Federal Government Planning to Make Portion of Commonwealth Greatest Grazing Area in Empire

PRE-WAR EXPORTS FALLEN OFF HALF

Survey of Vast Tract Shows Great Possibilities—Present Exports Not Half of What Might Be Total

THE Australian Federal Government plans to make the sparsely populated northern territory one of the greatest beef-producing areas in the world.

The northern territory is a vast area lying in the extreme north of Australia and running down the centre of the continent to the northern border of South Australia Unlike other parts of Australia, it has no State Government at all, but is under the direct control of the Federal authorities.

The principal reason for this is the sparseness of its population, its principal town, Port Darwin, sometimes known as Hell's Gate, having quite a small and very mixed body of residents. Although remote, great areas of the territory are among the finest grazing lands in the Commonwealth, but their development has been severely retarded by the unattractive system of land tenure.

At present, the forty-two-year pastoral leases are saddled with the Crown's right of resumption of twenty-five per cent at the end of the first ten years This means that at the end of twenty years half of the area could be resumed, although money probably would be going out all the time to bring the area up to full productive capacity.

The Government has now decided to call a conference of northern territory pastoral lessees with a view to formulating such a system as will lead to the rapid development of the beef industry. This is partly the outcome of sharp criticism by the president of the Australian Meat Board, J. B. Cramsie, who, after a world tour, declared that Northern Australia possessed greater possibilities for the economical production of beef than any other country.

Australia now is not exporting one-half the quantity of beef that went overseas before the war. While this is partly due to increased local consumption, the main reason is because the beef is not being produced.

OIL SOUGHT IN BROWN COALFIELD

Victorian Government Plan Exploitation of Vast Area of Potential Fuel Supply

Extensive research is being conducted by the Victorian State Electricity Commission into the possibilities of the rich Gippsland, Australia, brown coal deposits for the production of oil fuel.

Recent investigations by private organizations and by the Mines Department have shown that one of the richest deposits in the State is at Gellondale, in the Gippsland district. Many test bores have been made and they have shown the occurrence of brown coal over a very wide area.

In many places the thickness of the coal seam exceeds 500 feet, and the depth of the overburden averages little more than 30 feet The moisture content is fairly high but this is not considered a disadvantage when the coal is used for the production of oil fuel and by-products.

The coal is said to be more mature than that at the electricity commission's big mines at Yallourn, and it would therefore possess a higher calorific value. The depth of the seam, with the relative lightness of the overburden, would, it is considered, make possible the production of brown coal in this field far more cheaply than at most of the European fields.

SELLS OLD HOME

Lord Balfour Announces Decision to Dispose of London Mansion and Live in Country

London is loosing one of its most outstanding residents in the Earl of Balfour, the famous statesman Lord Balfour's decision is announced to sell the house he has occupied for fifty-eight years in Carlton Terrace, St James Park.

The house was occupied in the middle of the nineteenth century by another famous Prime Minister, Lord Palmerston, and was one of several mansions built upon the site of the Prince Regent's old palace, which was torn down in 1827 Lord Balfour, it is understood, will now retire to country life, making his home partly in England and partly in Scotland, where he was born.

The Parrot

By
WALTER DURANTY

"Counter Revolutionary!" She Bellowed Suddenly.

THE box car rattled and swayed as the train jerked slowly out of the station, but the big sergeant standing at the open door balanced himself easily in his thick felt boots

He held Sergey McTavish by the collar of his astrakhan tunic and the seat of his breeches, kicking and wriggling like a retriever pup. Then he swung the boy up level with his shoulder and threw him sprawling on a snowdrift.

"There," he said, "you young devil, that will teach you to steal potatoes from the army and sell them to dirty food speculators. You have the red head of an imp from hell and the black heart of a capitalist We have done with you."

So ended the six months' career of Sergey McTavish as mascot of the Seventh Battalion of Red Army Riflemen.

During those months he had tasted victory—in the swift advance to the gates of Warsaw—and defeat—in the hungry flight back across the frontier; he had come to swear like a Russian soldier—who swears with strength and zest; and he had looted gloriously. But he had not learned discipline or honesty, neither overcurrent in the Red Army of those days; and so here he was, gasping for breath on a snowdrift in the outskirts of a little town in the Ural foothills, while his late comrades jogged heedlessly on to their garrison at Ekaterinburg.

Sergey Sergeyitch McTavish, twelve-year-old orphan, son of a Scottish soldier of fortune and a German farmer's daughter from the old Volga "colonies," was alone, friendless, penniless and hungry in a wind-swept freight yard, with nothing in sight but rows of roofless cars whose broken sides stuck out like jagged teeth.

As he crept under the second of three lines of dismantled freight cars, his nose caught full blast the smell of cooking food. Right before him in the third row one car was intact, light shining behind the little window in the door, and smoke pouring from the stovepipe at the roof corner.

Heaven or Hell

WITHOUT hesitation Sergey banged his fist upon the door It slid open immediately, and a girl looked down at him.

"Come in, stranger," she cried "We were expecting you. But tell me quickly, is it to heaven or hell that we owe the pleasure of your visit?"

"He who sent me here said I had the red head of an imp of hell," replied Sergey, swinging up by her outstretched hand and slamming the door behind him. "So you can understand I find it cold here, and am hungry after my journey."

The girl brushed off his cap and pulled him forward under the kerosene lamp which hung from the middle of the roof.

"Red as hell's flames," she muttered admiringly. "That should keep you warm and we will fill your belly. My father, here, just said it would take a saint or a devil to conquer my problem, and I told him, as you knocked, that even St Nicholas the Wonder-Worker would never dare risk his wings in Russia today."

A roar of laughter from a heap of straw in the corner near the stove: "'Tis but a little imp for so great a task, Marfoosha, and I doubt if the Prince of Devils himself is a match for the Baba Papagai, who beyond doubt is his own grandmother." The voice shook a trifle over the last words, and Sergey glimpsed fingers gesturing quickly over a broad khaki chest.

There were three people in the car, the girl, comely and slim with a tangle of blonde hair, red shirt tucked into short blue kilt, and high black leather boots; the man, in khaki uniform, lying on the straw, fat brown cheeks, quick little black eyes in a bush of iron-grey hair and whiskers, and a small bent figure by the stove, so wrapped in a service overcoat of the old Imperial army that nothing was visible but a white wisp of beard, a bald shining pate, and two pink pointed ears.

"Comrade Imp," said the girl, "I present my grandfather, who lives alone in this car, being wise and having money, but not wise enough to help me in my trouble; and my father, who is commandant of the prison, but unable to save my lover, his prisoner, from——"

Comrade Soup

"DON'T forget to present Comrade Soup also," broke in the old man with a chuckle, "and little Comrade Vodka in his bottle, who is best of all." And plunging an iron ladle into the steaming pot, he filled an earthen bowl and passed it to the hungry boy.

Twice Sergey emptied the bowl, breaking chunks of black bread into the hot liquid. Then he gulped a stinging mouthful of spirit from the bottle and, taking a palmful of green flake mahorka and a scrap of newspaper from the old man, twisted the cone-shaped cigarette of the Russian soldier, lighted the upturned flap with a sulphur match, and putting the small end of the cone between his lips, puffed out a cloud of evil-smelling smoke

"What is the trouble you speak of," he asked, "and who is the Parrot Woman, the Baba Papagai?"

All three of his hosts spoke at once, in noisy excitement. There was a young man, a foreigner, a prisoner, an American, a soldier, who had come somehow from somewhere eastward on a train, young and cheerful and clever with his hands beyond belief; and the girl, Marfoosha, loved him, and he had mended the electric light for the prison and later for the whole town, and at first he was quite dumb like a beast, but now spoke humanly enough after several months, and two weeks ago the Soviet had agreed to let Marfoosha marry him, because they wanted to keep him in the town to start again the nail factory, as he had promised.

This Sergey learned first, because the girl talked fastest and loudest, but through it all beat like the drum in a regimental band the name of the Parrot Woman, Baba Papagai, who was a witch and a demon and the grandmother of all the devils.

She had a familiar spirit; this terrible woman, a parrot, red and grey, in a wire cage; and when it bit you, you were guilty, and when it didn't, you were innocent; but it always bit you, and so you were always shot.

Famous Revolutionary

NOBODY knew where she came from, but it was said she was the widow of a famous revolutionary who had worked in a factory at Ekaterinburg and had been shot by the Czar's army in 1906. And now she was president of a "Flying Tribunal," that moved about the whole province judging counter-revolutionaries, and always she made them put a finger in the parrot's cage, and always it bit them, and then they were shot. And it was reported that she lived on the smell of blood and must kill a man every day or she would die, and the devil, her grandson, would fly off with her And when the Soviet knew she was coming to hold court in the town they were all very frightened, because there was only one victim, the ex-manager of the factory, who twice had tried to escape from the town and had been prevented. That one man would never be enough for the Baba Papagai. She would suspect the Soviet of being lukewarm in the cause of the revolution and perhaps put some of them to the trial of that horrid parrot, as had happened before elsewhere, always with fatal results.

So four days ago the Soviet held a meeting hastily and in secret, and had decided to sacrifice their American. They were sorry, but it was his head or theirs, so no argument was possible.

Marfoosha and her father who, as prison commandant, felt most uneasy about the whole affair, had come to ask the advice of the hermit in the box car. But he had been of no help to them, and the father had said it would take an angel or a devil to find the way out of the mess, and just at that second Sergey had knocked and said at once he was an imp from hell, so what would he suggest?

Canny Scotch

SERGEY'S Scotch blood whispered caution. He puffed his mahorka cigarette and declared profoundly that there was a solution for every problem, but this case being extremely difficult he had better set eyes first on the woman and her parrot, to say nothing of the American and the ex-manager of the factory, before deciding what should be done.

"Never drive pigs too swiftly," said the ancient, banging the cork of his vodka bottle hard against the side of the car and burying it in the recess of his greatcoat. "Let our Comrade Imp view the situation for himself, and maybe he will be able to make a plan. For me, I am at a loss—I admit it freely; the young man must die; there is no doubt of it."

"Everyone must die some day," replied his son, "and I, as commandant of a prison, know that some die quicker than others. But this American is a friendly youth, and clever with his hands, and Marfoosha loves him dearly; so I want his life saved and no trouble with this infernal old woman. If the flame-headed Imp can help us, I, Alexei Petrovich, promise that he shall have all the food he needs in this cold country and a warm corner by my fire to toast his toes till they are red as his hair."

All of which sounded good to Sergey McTavish as he said good-bye to the old man and accompanied Marfoosha and her father across the cold white plain to the little town.

The prison was a large house set back among tall trees whose branches hung glittering inch thick with frost in the light of an electric arc lamp. A sentry, bundled to the ears in bearskin, stood aside with a thump of his bayonetted gun upon the doorstep.

The Lovers Meet

IN the high, square entrance hall two men were sitting before a huge fireplace, ablaze with round birch logs thick as a man's body. The younger leaped up as they entered, tall and loose limbed, in a uniform of dark mustard color such as Sergey had never seen. In two strides, so it seemed, he was across the room, lifting Marfoosha right off her feet in his arms.

"Enough, Mahlinkie, enough," cried Marfoosha in a stifled voice.

Regaining her feet, she flung her arm round Sergey's shoulder. "This is my American, little comrade; his name is Djim, but that is a dog's name, not a man's, so I call him Mahlinkie, the little one, because he is so tall." She laughed gaily and pushed the boy forward, pulling off his hat with her other hand. "Look, Mahlinkie, it's fire, but it doesn't burn." And she ran her fingers through Sergey's flaming hair.

"For the lovamike!"

Sergey McTavish did not understand this American greeting, but something within him called forth two half-forgotten words in reply. "Scottish, gorrd-am-you-sirr."

The effect was startling High in the air went Sergey in those strong young arms, while a torrent of unfamiliar words beat upon his ears. What a din they made! Sergey, six feet from the ground, beside himself with excitement, yelling his new-found slogan; the American shouting strange noises, and Marfoosha dancing around them, half in laughter, half in tears.

The prison warden and friend by the fire rushed forward in panic "Are you mad?" cried the former, catching his daughter around the waist. "Stop this uproar. You don't know what's happened. She is here already, staying at Petrushka's house."

Marfoosha halted as if struck by lightning, and the American stiffened, holding Sergey in midair

Slowly he lowered the boy to the ground, still grasping him firmly under the arms An instant's silence, then the warden continued "She came tonight with her parrot—saints defend us—and holds court tomorrow Very angry when she heard there were only two cases. She will judge the factory manager in the morning, and the next day—he jerked his thumb toward the American—"it's his turn."

Work to Be Done

SERGEY McTAVISH awoke next morning to find Marfoosha and her American standing beside the bench on which he had passed the night before the fire

"Wake up, little comrade, wake up and eat your breakfast, for there's work for you to do." She had tried to speak cheerfully, but as Sergey rubbed his eyes she sank down in a heap beside the bench, sobbing desperately.

"The Baba Papagai is in a frightful humor," she said. "We know it from Petrushka. She had her parrot at breakfast with her, early two hours ago, before it was light, and sat there talking, talking. She said to him, 'Belogvardeyetz'" (White Guard) "and the parrot answered 'Belogvardeyetz,' and then the Baba Papagai laughed and the parrot said over and over again (Belogvardeyetz), and the Baba Papagai laughed some more.

"You, Sergey Sergeyitch, do you know what that means?" Marfoosha leaned across the bench and laid her clenched fists close to Sergey's heart.

"No," said Sergey uneasily.

"Death! That's all! Just death for my American!" Marfoosha laid her head on her arms, then straightened up and rattled on breathlessly:

"The court opens at ten o'clock You go there. It will be just a rehearsal. The Baba Papagai is having her rehearsal this morning. The real show is when the American comes before her." Marfoosha's voice faltered. Sergey again stopped eating.

"She knows it. She told Petrushka she had heard of this American in town. She said she had never before had the chance to try her papagai on an American. She cursed America. She said it was the sink of iniquity, a den of wolves, the castle of capitalism. She said that all Americans were White Guards, and when she said 'American' to her parrot this morning, it just answered 'Belogvardeyetz.'

"Sergey, come see for yourself."

Outside the sun was rising red through the mist over the blank white steppe.

The Church-Prison

TEN minutes from her home Marfoosha stopped, took Sergey by the arm, and pointed straight ahead.

"There it is," she said.

"What, the church?" asked Sergey.

"It used to be the church. Don't you see the guard in front? Now go, please, and come to us as soon as it is over"

Sergey McTavish recovered his balance, frowned a moment at the retreating figure, then proceeded warily toward the church. There was nothing strange to him about a Cheka trial taking place there. The "Flying Tribunals of the All-Russian Extraordinary Commission for Combating Counter-Revolutions" had found that their sessions made a far greater impression on their White Guard enemies if they were held in the church. It appealed, too, to the Red sense of humor.

In front of the building, beneath an ikon of the Virgin Mary, a Red Guard paced up and down, his conical cap pulled tight over his ears to meet the threadbare collar of an old grey overcoat. The buttons cut off because they had borne the insignia of the Czar, were replaced with string When Sergey approached, the Red Guard dropped the butt of his rifle nonchalantly in the snow, crying

"What do you want, little princeling?" with an ironic wink at the boy's astrakhan suit.

"Don't call me names, comrade," grinned back Sergey. "I'm Red Army, too This is loot from the Polaks, issued to me by the regimental tailor, Seventh Battalion Rifles. Just lost touch with headquarters. Now be a good comrade and give me a cigarette and let me go inside and get warm a bit."

The sentry laughed, said he'd no tobacco, but obligingly turned his back while Sergey slipped past into the church.

Before the Slaughter

VERY quietly he groped his way forward to the last of a number of rough wooden benches which had been placed in the nave, and sat down behind rows of people bent forward in eager attention. At the other end of the church a man was speaking in a high-pitched voice, trailing off at times into falsetto. The words came rapidly, tumbling over one another, hardly intelligible. Sergey would only catch a phrase now and then—"never . . . Czar's Government . . always tried to work for the people . . worker myself . . not my fault . . education . . no counter revolutionary, believe me, believe me, believe me."

Cutting this babble like a saw, another voice, metallic, harsh, rasped a single word: "Belogvardeyetz!" ("White Guard!")

Then a loud laugh. Then silence.

Sergey's eyes, by now accustomed to the semi-darkness, sought the source of the inhuman voice. With a shiver of interest he realized the word "Belogvardeyetz!" had come from a cage swinging beneath a stiff gold embroidery attached like a banner to a pole, which stood at the left of the altar. Within the cage a grey-red bird moved listlessly on its perch. That was the bird that talked like a man, but who had laughed?

Near the altar a woman was rising to her feet behind a table draped with red cloth. Erect, she loomed enormous, six feet or more in height. Traces of mocking laughter were still about her lips, but her eyes bore no sign of it. The flickering light gleamed on abnormally protruding eyeballs, threw into relief a network of swollen veins on either temple, and showed her thickened throat bursting from the collar of a soldier's tunic.

Sergey felt his hands shake as they fumbled for his pockets. He needed no one to tell him this was the Baba Papagai.

A Crumpled Human

SHE turned to the left where a man was standing, thin and crumpled, between two soldiers with fixed bayonets.

"Counter revolutionary!" she bellowed suddenly. The man staggered. He moistened his lips with the end of his tongue, and seemed to be trying to speak, but before the words came the Baba Papagai continued more quietly:

"I know what you want to say, citizen. You never carried on counter revolution. You never harmed or oppressed anyone, never resisted the proletariat; in fact, you admire the revolution intensely and think Lenin and Trotzky the greatest men in history. Yes, I know all that. I've heard the same story before, often." Her voice deepened and again became harsh. She wiped her mouth with the back of her hand and again resumed: "Fortunately, fortunately, we have here with us the means of seeing beneath these fine words, right to the inner secrets of your heart. You are surprised, perhaps, that an ignorant old woman like me should see, should be able to know the secret heart of an 'intelligenter' like you, but I don't pretend so much. It is this wise bird here, who is older than I, older, it maybe than anyone in this town, who by long experience can recognize a counter revolutionary at first glance, can smell the black soul of him in one sniff."

Her voice had become monotonous, rising and falling like that of a priest reciting some familiar ritual.

"Walk forward, my friend of the people, walk forward, and put your finger into the cage of my little comrade, that he may take a sniff at it. Perhaps you are innocent, as you would have us believe. The little comrade will know, because he never makes a mistake. If you are innocent, he will do you no harm, will not touch your finger; but if your hand has offended against the people"—again that inhuman roar—"he will bite it to the bone, and after my judgment you shall receive your punishment."

Dragged to the Parrot

SHE made a sign to the soldiers, who took the cringing man by the arms and dragged him toward the parrot's cage.

There was no sound save the prisoner's feet dragging across the floor as the soldiers carried him to the last instance of justice He had slumped down in their arms so that when they reached the foot of the golden banner his head fell in the shadow cast by the bottom of the cage.

"Carry out the procedure, soldiers of the Revolution. If the servant of dogs cannot lift his hand, lift it for him"

The prisoner struggled. One of the soldiers deftly twisted the left arm of the writhing man behind his back and pushed it upward until he gasped "I'll do it." The soldier released the pressure on the twisted arm and the prisoner stood upright. He lifted his right hand with extended forefinger and thrust it forward by short jerks. Twice he dropped his hand, and twice the soldier pressed the hammer lock until he gasped again "I'll do it."

The third time his finger reached the cage. It trembled so that he was unable to poke it through the bars. The other guard grasped it firmly and pushed it into the cage.

The parrot eyed the prisoner's hand. Cocking its head on one side, it cast its beady gaze appraisingly at the forefinger that shook as though playfully just below its beak. Its claws against the perch made a faint scratching sound which seemed to reverberate in the silence. A peasant seated on the front bench crossed himself mechanically.

Parrot's Deadly Beak

THE parrot bent its neck and rubbed its beak on the perch. Sergey almost laughed. Then he half choked and gasped as he saw the parrot lunge swiftly, take the finger with a snapping motion in its beak, and bite downward.

More shocking than any scream was the silence of the prisoner. The parrot had bitten him to the bone. Such a relief, this stab of pain, from the slow torture of suspense, so welcome the knowledge of his doom after its uncertainty, that the bird's bite, though meaning death, was like a douche of cold water, reviving his manhood.

"Belogvardeyetz!" croaked the parrot, back on its perch.

"He never makes a mistake," exclaimed the Baba Papagai, and gabbled formally: "Citizen Nikitin, this court finds you guilty of counter revolution."

"Take him out!" she shouted. "To the cellar with the White Guard servant of dogs!"

The prisoner was the calmest man in the church. Erect, his head back, he yielded to the urging of his guards as they dragged him through the door.

The Baba Papagai put on the cloth cap. Her upper lip clamped down in savage determination. "Tonight at eleven o'clock we'll hear the next case on the docket." She gathered up her papers, shoved the table aside, and strode down the aisle.

Sergey had intended to slip out before the others, but he had not reckoned with this abrupt ending of the session. Before he could move, the Baba Papagai was in the aisle, scrutinizing the faces as she passed. With every step she took, his courage waned By the time she reached his bench, he was huddled, cowering in his seat. He felt numb, in the clutch of a nightmare. Those eyes were the eyes of a Kelpie, that monster from the stories of Scotland his father had told him long ago, half bull, half demon, but shaped like a man, which dwelt at the bottom of the deep lochs of the Highlands and on nights when the full moon shone appeared beside the skiffs of unwary boatmen and dragged them down to death.

"It Bit"

RUNNING back to the prison as fast as he could, Sergey felt the movement of his legs in the sharp air send the blood tingling through his veins, and by the time he reached the house and paused to scrape the snow from his boots, he had shaken off his fears. He felt big with importance as he entered the hall and knew that he had news to tell.

"Well, what happened?" cried the commandant.

"It bit all right," announced Sergey in a matter-of-fact tone.

Marfoosha lifted her head as if just awakened Catching Sergey by the arm, she whispered "Tell us about it. All about it."

Sergey began. They listened as though their lives depended upon every word

"And then," he went on, "she said she would hold court again tonight.

"Tonight?" all three broke out. "Tonight? It was to be tomorrow"

"That's what she said," responded Sergey.

Marfoosha threw herself on the floor, clasping her lover round the knees. "They shan't. They shan't!" she screamed.

His face was white and his lips trembled a little as he patted her head, repeating tenderly "Nichevo, nichevo, nichevo." It was the only Russian word he could pronounce without a trace of accent, the universal "Never mind" or "What's the use?" of Slavic fatalism.

But his caressing hand froze when the commandant mumbled thickly: "They shoot you through the back of the head."

Marfoosha sobbed aloud.

"Yes, that's how they do it," insisted her father, tipsy with indignation. "They take you down to the cellar of the church, and just as you pass the threshold they shoot you in the back of the head. And you, you damned imp!" he yelled at Sergey. "What are you going to do? I thought you could find something."

Weary Marfoosha

MARFOOSHA'S weary "Let him alone," roused her father to a higher pitch.

"No, I won't let him alone. What good has he done? You damned imp! It was Dedushka who swore you amounted to something. The old man is getting crazier every day. Suppose you get along over there and let him know how worthless you are. Get on. Get out of here." Unable to vent his feelings otherwise, the commandant staggered to his feet and advanced with threatening fist toward the boy.

Sergey retreated sullenly. He was half way down the steps when the commandant rushed out and yelled at him "What time will it be?"

"Eleven o'clock tonight," shouted the boy without pausing.

It was already past five o'clock and pitch dark. He found his way through the town by the glow from the windows and afterward by instinct, like a young wild animal, accurately retraced the path of the evening before. His thoughts were whirling about the awful eyes of the Baba Papagai. The longer he thought, the more convinced he became that she was a Kelpie His father's stories came back more vividly. Surely there was some detail he had forgotten. His father certainly had spoken of a charm. But that was all so long ago. To Sergey a whole lifetime seemed passed since then, and he groped back in his memory as an old man strives to recall his youth.

His boots brushed against the branches of a fir tree growing beside the railroad track. Sergey felt as though a door in his mind had opened halfway.

Good for Kelpies

"TREE berries! The berries of the mountain ash! That's what father said was good for Kelpies. Woven in a cross.

But something else, too, when there were no ash berries. Something still better, he reflected. He was walking head down, so absorbed in the effort to remember that he went past the old man's box car without noticing it. Suddenly he stopped, sniffed the air like a hound on the trail, turned, saw the box car and ran toward it. He continued to sniff as he banged on the door, stamping impatiently until it opened with a puff of savory steam.

"I've found it!" shouted Sergey, leaping up and seizing the astonished old man by the hand. "I've found it!" he repeated, dancing in excitement. "We can save him now."

"In the name of the holy saints Boris and Gleb!" ejaculated the grandfather. "What is it you've found to make you jump like a flea on a frog's back?"

Sergey hardly heard him. His eyes were roving round the cabin.

"Ha! There in the corner!" He heaved a deep sigh of relief. "The charm!" he exclaimed. "The charm, little grandfather, the charm to defeat the Kelpie."

"And now perhaps you'll tell me what a Kelpie is and why you're behaving like an idiot," grunted the old man sarcastically as he dipped a bowl of stew and placed it, smoking hot, before the boy. How good it smelled! Sergey recollected his stomach so keenly that he forgot his excitement. Over the stew he related the day's events, dwelling on his conviction that the Baba Papagai was a Kelpie.

The old man nodded affirmatively and looked with as much wonder as old age can feel at the red blood of his small visitor bobbing up and down over the bowl.

"Whew, I'm late, terribly late. Maybe he's already gone. Must run like the devil."

Sergey's Good-Bye

SERGEY jumped for the door, pulling his fur cap over his ears, and with a shrill "Good-bye!" bolted into the night.

He took the steps at the prison in one jump, landed on his heels, skidded, and fell in a heap at the feet of the surprised sentry.

"Gangway!" he gasped. "Lemme in."

"Who, then, is holding you?" said the sentry as Sergey jerked open the door and rushed into the hall.

It was empty.

Sergey stopped, frozen with fear that he had come too late to give his talisman to the American. His feet lagged as he crossed the hall, but voices in a room beyond quickened his step. He pushed his head cautiously through the door, entered quickly, closed it with a bang, and jumped forward. Marfoosha and the American were sitting on the floor talking so earnestly that they scarcely heeded Sergey's presence. On the bed lay the prison commandant, groaning and panting. He was drunk.

Sergey brought his two hands down thwack on the backs of Marfoosha and her lover.

"Come! Quick! I've found it—the charm—to save you. Where's the kitchen? Come with me." His words brought the two instantly to their feet, and the commandant rolled his eyes, trying to get up.

"Quick, here!" Sergey grabbed the American with his right hand and was digging in his pocket with the other when the Red Guard brusquely shoved him aside with: "Out of the way now, and enough of this monkey business. Can't help it. Orders is orders. Come along."

Marfoosha threw her arms around her lover's neck. The Red Guard frowned with embarrassment, but paused. Sergey turned his back as though in sympathy with the feelings of the lovers, but in the moment of their embrace he pulled from his pocket a little white object and, clenching it tightly in his fist, whirled and cried.

"Well, comrade, shake hands. Come on, be a man—don't stand there and bellow."

The American looked down at him, smiled, released Marfoosha and took Sergey's small paw.

"A talisman. Keep it in your hand until the last minute," whispered Sergey. "It's magic. Hold it tight; dig your nails into it, and you can't lose." Then aloud. "Good-bye, comrade."

The heavy door of the house slammed shut.

On the Side

They Weren't the Marrying Kind

By JACK LAIT

THE season was petering out at the seaside resort. Those who could afford to pay the cut-throat rates there couldn't afford to be seen there when they were due further north. But a few stragglers still remained, because of some personal attachment or something specific to intrigue them. Among the stay-a-while-longers were Dottie Freesbury and Collin Fowkes.

Dottie was a nationally famed grass-widow. She had caught the middle-aged Worthington Freesbury, millionaire plate glass king, the year of her coming out, and the marriage had been Page One copy. That was when she caught him. It made Page One again when he caught her—with a young Bohemian who drew things or sculped or something. He sued her and won, but awarded her a handsome settlement, and the gorgeous Dottie was now a free lance, with plenty of money, most of her youth, and all of her good looks plus the use of a distinguished name that rated attention wherever and whenever pronounced.

Collin Fowkes was a deadly big-game hunter. To him the biggest game was a beautiful woman. And he worked high-power artillery. He never engaged in light flirtations, never bothered with simpering flappers or chorines or girls about him in his social contacts. He aimed high and shot hard—and usually hit.

When Collin had first heard that the dashing Mrs. Freesbury was at the hotel, he had smiled himself a little smile. Collin had seen Dottie once, in the city, and had then and there spotted her for at least one good try.

Collin had some millions of his own—inherited. He had the manner, the ease of having always been wealthy. Besides, he was an attractive man on sight. Moreover, he was a bachelor.

On the Side

ON the side of the hotel, leading out toward the sports exit, where the guests ran free in their bathing togs, and lounged informally when they didn't want to invade the dressy lobby, was a wide tiled veranda. It was a favorite spot for getting acquainted, sizing up and trying out. Many a romance had been born and many another had been killed there.

It was appropriate, therefore, that Collin and Dottie should meet there.

He didn't do any clumsy stage business. There was no handkerchief dropped by her, either. He looked at her, she looked at him, he knew she was willing to have a go at it, she knew he wanted her to, they both smiled, and drew up chairs whose arms touched.

Thereafter they stayed on. Not that both couldn't have chosen some other place mutually agreeable, where they could continue the experiment, but neither offered such a suggestion; and neither would leave as long as the other remained. Because by now the affair had taken on the significance and magnitude of a rather serious episode.

Both Collin and Dottie, fearfully and with misgivings, were hooked as neither ever had been before. It began to feel like love.

Romances, hook-ups of one degree or another, were not new to these two. But this trip, while it offered no new scenery, threw on a new light and gave them new visions.

Dottie had married because no girl could turn down such a brilliant proposal. She had never cared for Freesbury, and soon all but hated him. Her peccadillos, including the one with the artist, had been pastimes in her idle, restless young life. She enjoyed playing with fireworks, she relished having men mad over her, now and then she felt her heart bump faster over one of them. But this love racket was a novelty—and it puzzled and dizzied her.

Engaged Once

YOUNG FOWKES had been engaged once, when he was scarcely a man, but it hadn't jelled, somehow, and the memory of it was a faded and impersonal film to him now. He realized that he had never even come anywhere near loving the girl, and thanked his guardian saint for having saved him.

He had engaged in no end of fleeting twosomes, with maidens, wives, widows and divorcees. He had always protected himself, as he put it, and had escaped not only matrimony but important scandals and other horrors. This time, though, he felt himself slipping rapidly and his old tricks not only wouldn't work but he couldn't call on them to try.

Collin hadn't as yet asked Dottie to marry him. But he had certainly told her that he loved her—and those were words that he never played around with carelessly. He had told many women that he admired them, that he desired them—even that he adored them—but that simple, homely, wholesome word l-o-v-e was dynamite.

Dottie had been no more backward in confessing—yes, vociferating—that she loved Collin. And she, too, had a fair notion of the high explosive properties of that Anglo-Saxon verb on which rest the homes, the hearts, the very lives—not to say the fox trot lyrics—of our world.

Now, then—what to do?

They were free to marry. They were certainly in love with one another. And yet the word marriage, which had been running around in their heads for many days, had never been spoken.

Collin was a constitutional bachelor. He was afraid of himself whenever he had a thought, even a remote one, of being tied to one woman; tied even as such things go these nights.

Didn't Need Protection

DOTTIE, too, was not one of the old style wrens who crave possession by might of clergy and law. She didn't need protection or support. She had never doubted her own fascination enough to demand security, the shackles of property or the chains of wedlock.

All right, then. Why marry?

Both had thought the thing out from various angles. And both, strangely, hesitated to go through that dread routine—and yet—and still—

This was so different. This was so beautiful and so tremendous. Could they preserve it and enhance it and nourish it and glorify it by any other system? Should they hold out their "freedom?" Neither wanted any from the other. Should they go through the ceremony for the sake of legitimatizing their grand flare, toss the sop to the gods of convenience, convention?

Of course, Collin hadn't asked her, but that meant nothing to Dottie; she would soon enough have asked him, had she definitely decided that marriage was what she wanted. They were holding off because of their own doubts in themselves and in the effect of matrimony on love, not because either was poaching or playing safe.

It wasn't the estate or wifehood, exactly, that challenged Dottie. She had been a wife, but the circumstances were so different that none of what she had experienced with Freesbury could or should apply in this problem. But she had seen so much of it about her—wives and husbands who must at one time have been heavenly horizons to prompt them into such a situation, who now were disillusioned, disgusted, bored, hostile, regretful and remorseful over what had seemed a sacred and inspired union and had turned out to be a pain and a crime.

Individual

THIS was individual—to her and Collin, the man she loved, the first man she had ever loved—and who loved her.

They were no babies, these sophisticated, society broke big-towners. They talked frankly and intelligently, from wells of knowledge and experience.

So Collin decided to put the problem up to Dottie at about the same time that she planned to lay it in his lap. They were seated in a palmy, balmy corner of the corridor, looking out at a lazy sailboat drifting in the gentle trade wind, when Collin, tightening his hold on her soft little hand, said:

"Honey girl, is there any good reason why we shouldn't get married?"

She didn't fillip off a frivolous comeback such as "You never asked me." They understood. She replied.

"That's what's been keeping me awake nights. I'm glad you mentioned it, Man."

"I'd marry you, of course, and you would me. No use fencing or finessing between us. How do you feel about it?"

"Well, Man, yes and no. We love one another. Is that a good reason for marriage or is it a better one why we shouldn't? Most folks just take it as a logical sequence that if they love and they can marry, they should. But is it logical? Is that the solution?"

On the Fence

"I NEVER thought so—before. I'm on the fence even now. I never wanted to before, so never had to argue it out before. I wonder if I've had the hoping and husbanding instinct all the time, one of my suppressed desires, and didn't know it?"

"Well, I married the first man who ever asked he to, and have said no to several hundred since. They were after my money, or I didn't care a whoop for them. It was always so easy to laugh it off. But this time—great grief, I don't know which way to fall."

"Exactly my case. Mothers have thrown their daughters at me, and pretty ladies have been kind to me, and either were married and wanted to keep it sub rosa, or weren't, and wanted to marry me and hold me up for the whole world to see as they would shout: 'This is mine. Hands off!' It was all too simple. None of 'em ever had a chance—unless you count one flapper that almost got me when I was too young to know tin minnies from live bait, and then I wriggled off the hook. Since then I've snapped at nothing, no matter how shiny. But you sparkle like nothing I ever saw before. I want you something terrible. But I'm afraid of a barb—"

"That's it. I may have a barb. You don't know. I don't know. And vice versa. Who does know? Who can, Man?"

Can Call It Off

"NOBODY. But on the other hand, what can we lose? If we try it, and don't like it, we'll call it off."

"Surely. It's only a trip to Paris and a little chickenfeed. Freesbury, the swine, didn't have the decency to let me do it that way. He had to drag it through courts and assert himself. I don't know why men do such things. Their 'honor' is bruised, so they tell it to the reverberating heavens. When a man's wife quits caring for him, or quits behaving as he wants her to, he should be the last one to confess it, not to say proclaim it."

"Of course. With us, honey girl, there'd never be anything like that. If it came to a split-up, I'd let you work it anywhere and any way you wanted. No use trying to hold a woman who doesn't want a man, any more than a woman trying to hang on to a man whose gone sour on her—unless, of course, she needs him to keep her in the necessities of life. Nothing of that nature affects us."

"I heartily agree, Man. You have some of the most gentlemanly and up-to-scratch ideas. That's one of the reasons why I love you so much."

"You have a few brains, yourself, pretty; and plenty of class and character and breeding. That's why I can talk to you and you can understand me. Say, you know, I think we two really could click it off together."

"I think it would be—kind of, that is—well, worth trying. We needn't consider it a try-out, though."

"Everything is a try-out, darling. Life is a try-out. Many find it a mistake and end it; many make it a mistake and others end it for them. That's the parallel to divorce in marriages. The suicide sues for the end, the murdered one is sued. We're all married, more or less, to each other in this world we all have to crawl on, anyway. It's relative."

"I agree with you. We always seem to agree (tap wood!) on everything. I'm sure that if we agree we should be married, we'll agree we should be unmarried if that time ever comes (cross your fingers!) So—shall we step and wet our tootsies in the waters of matrimony?"

"Sounds good to me. If the water's hot, we can skip back out. If we like it we'll stay. We love each other, so we have one mighty stout rope to cling to when we feel we're going under or the waves are rolling too wild."

Dottie lit a cigarette.

Likes the Thought

"YOU know," she said, through the smoke, "I rather like the thought. I thought I was about the most unwifely woman ever. But I get a sort of kick out of approaching it again. After all, I suppose that is woman's natural job—"

"Not at all. It's strictly man-made. Man is the one who wants sole possession—so he'll know who the father of his children is and the rest of that psychology theory. Woman would never marry if man hadn't made them do it in the first instance and then developed it as a habit and made the woman take the defensive if she was not a wife. It isn't a natural urge—to marry, I mean; its strictly social. If we were on a desert island, we two alone, we wouldn't think of marriage and we wouldn't miss it, or any of its advantages, because it wouldn't have any advantages there."

"Then I suppose I'm a very strait-laced and mid-Victorian party, because now that we've settled that we will, I feel a whole lot relieved. Don't you?"

"Sure do sweetheart. Now that you're about to be my wife, I may call you sweetheart?"

"About to be your wife? Why, we've even fixed just how we're going to be divorced. If anyone has the right to call me sweetheart, you have."

"All right, sweetheart. That's fine. Now, one more question—when are we going to do this rash deed?"

"Tomorrow. Why delay? Let's go to it and have it over with. You can take gas if you're nervous. I'm a veteran, having once had the ailment."

"Suits me great. Tomorrow, then?"

"In the morning. I prefer a justice of the peace. Had a minister and a big church wedding and bridesmaids and flowers and all the trimmings last time. But it didn't help."

"Justice of the peace is right."

"By the way, Man. Do you know—you never proposed to me?"

"Oh—sorry."

Collin arose, bent over, kissed her hand, and said with honest solemnity:

"Dottie, darling, I love you. Will you marry me?"

And she replied:

"Oh—Collin—this is so sudden! . . . I will marry you, Collin . . . there, now we've gone through every bit of the ritual—just like regular marrying people."

He looked at her, she looked at him, and—

THE PARROT

but Marfoosha stood where they had left her. Then she sank back on her knees.

Believed in Ceremony

THE Baba Papagai believed in ceremony of of a kind.

As eleven boomed from the tower, the Baba Papagai moved down the aisle toward the altar. Behind two soldiers, each carrying a lighted candle a yard long and thick as a man's arm. Behind them a third, holding aloft the golden banner, with the parrot's cage, wrapped in a white napkin, swinging beneath it like a censer. Then the clerk of the court with measured step. Then two guards with fixed bayonets. Then the prisoner, head high, shoulders squared, marching slow as a funeral parade. Finally, two more guards, stolid, ponderous.

The Baba Papagai stode to the table before the altar, turned, surveyed the audience, seated herself, and folded her arms. The man with the ecclesiastical banner placed it neatly in its socket and, with a nervous gesture, flicked off the cover from the cage. The light of the candles fell on the parrot. It blinked, ruffled its feathers, stretched its neck and croaked: "Gotova!" ("Ready!")

"Comrades," said the Baba Papagai, pushing back her chair, crossing her legs and shoving her cap to the back of her head. "Comrades, we are here tonight to try a foreign dog who was sent to impose the might of his capitalist masters upon the workers and peasants of the Russian Socialist Federation of Soviet Republics. He comes from the country which above all would like to see the first Workers and Peasants Government once more enslaved by tyrants. An American! It means a dog.

"Now, you dog of a White Guard, speak now for yourself. Say why you, a foreigner, dared invade our country.

Childish Russian

THE American answered boldly in his childish Russian.

"Yeh gavaryou ochen malo po Russky. No yah ne vinovat."

"Oh, you speak very little Russian, but you're not guilty. You know enough to say that. And you've nothing more to say?" The Baba Papagai rose to her feet and leaned forward. "Nothing more?"

"Nichevo," retorted the prisoner cooly. It was the one word he pronounced perfectly in Russian.

Her face darkened with fury.

"Dog!" The word echoed to the farthest corners of the building.

Immediately the parrot responded: Belogvardeyets!"

"The little comrade has spoken. Let him judge the case."

The two guards beside the American grasped him by the arms. He needed no urging. "Nichevo," he said again, to tell them he was not afraid to play his part.

He walked straight up to the cage. Sergey held his breath. The boy's glance shifted rapidly from the parrot's cage to the Baba Papagai, still leaning forward on the table, her Kelpie's eyes a-goggle at her victim.

"Hell!" said the American aloud. The foreign word rang out defiantly. "Hell!" he repeated again, and stuck his forefinger into the cage.

The parrot lifted its wings. Every spectator—save perhaps one, for Sergey's Scotch heart beat stoutly in his breast—knew that it would strike. It lifted its wings, squawked, teetered on its perch, lowered its beak close to the proffered finger, then half flew, half hopped across the cage beating the air, screeching atrociously: "Konchala! Konchala!" ("Finished!")

"Well? What do you say to that, old girl?" asked the American in English, grinning at the Baba Papagai.

"Dog! Dog!"

HER eyes were glazed. She crashed her fist upon the table.

"Dog! Dog!" she roared.

"Belogvardeyets! Belogvardeyets!" weakly echoed the parrot.

"Once more, you dog!" commanded the Baba Papagai.

"As often as you like," answered the American, and put his finger again through the bars.

This time the parrot never pretended to investigate. It cowered at the bottom of the cage, buried its beak in its breast feathers, and only when the Baba Papagai shrieked "Dog!" at the top of her voice did it respond with a low croak. "Belogvardeyets!"

"Release the prisoner. He is acquitted." The parrot woman kicked aside her table and strode down the aisle. For the sake of this one victim she could not disavow her favorite instrument of terror.

Sergey Sergeyitch McTavish sat up straight in his seat and stared at her as she passed him. The moment she disappeared he ran forward and grasped the American by the hand.

"A Kelpie! I told you! A Kelpie!" he yelled crazily. "My father was right—my father knew."

The young soldier swung Sergey aloft.

"You're all right, kid," he shouted in English. "You may be cuckoo, but you're there with the goods." Then in Russian: "What was it, malchik? I kept it in my hand until the last, but afterward I dropped it. How did you do it?"

His mouth close to the other's ear, Sergey murmured: "Take a sniff at your finger."

The American gave a loud yell, then checked himself.

"Yes," whispered Sergey, "garlic—that's the charm against Kelpies."

The two set off at a trot for the home of Marfoosha.

How Foundlings in Rio de Janeiro Are Cared For

IN nearly 200 years of its existence the Casa dos Expostos, or foundling home, in Rio de Janeiro has received 44,000 babies. The home is known as the "roda," or wheel, from a small window opening on a narrow alley which swings like a revolving door. This window is back a foot or more from the wall of the house, and to it, generally at night, the mother or father brings the unwanted baby. The child is pushed against the revolving window and is received by a guardian within. The person who brings the baby is never seen, and no questions are asked. The institution was opened in 1736 by Sisters of Charity. The girl babies are cared for until they are eighteen, while the boys are kept until they become twenty-one years old. The children receive religious training, and the girls usually enter domestic service or become nurses. The boys are taught trades.

Third Accident

By DANA BURNET
Illustrated by Rex Maxon

NATALIE WEBSTER met Elliott Crane the Winter that she was eight years old. The place of their introductioo was a snow-covered slope in the park, and the manner of it was most informal.

The month was February, the day Friday. Natalie, demurely mounted on her little sled, came scooting down-hill—and met Elliott at the bottom of the slope. It was not a propitious meting. When frightened governesses untangled the resulting snarl, Natalie was found to be unharmed. Elliott spent the next six weeks in bed, with a broken leg

The Sunday following the accident, Natalie came to see him. Mrs. Webster came with her. They were ushered into the room where Elliott lay. His mother stood by and signaled him to be gracious.

"I'm thorry, Ellyet," lisped Natalie. "I didn't mean to do it. I'm very thorry."

"It doesn't hurt," said Elliott, embarrassed.

"I'm thorry."

"It's all right. I don't care."

"I'm very thorry."

The reiteration of this formula annoyed Elliott. He said coldly: "You can't steer a sled like thet one you got, sitting up straight. You got to go belly-buster."

"Shall we leave the children alone?" suggested Natalie's mother, anticipating a sentimental juvenile rapprochement.

The two children were left alone. Natalis freed from parental supervision, walked up to the bed.

"Can I thee where it'th broken?" she asked eagerly.

"No," said Elliott.

"Wath it broken right in two?"

"Sure. I guess so."

"Why can't I thee it?"

"Cause it's all bandaged up," said Elliott.

"I don't like boyth," said Natalie. "And, anyway, my Nanny theyth it wath your fault, cauth you wath in the way."

Six Weeks in Bed

ALL the smoldering resentment induced by the prospect of six weeks in bed leaped to Elliott's lips.

"I was not in the way! Like heck! Girls don't know how to slide down-hill. Where'd you get the sled? It's just a baby sled. Why don't you get a sled like mine? Why don't you stay home and play with your dolls, or something? You make me sick. I got something to do. I got to read the Funnies."

"I bet you can't read," chanted Natalie. "I bet you can only look at the picturth."

"If you wasn't a girl, I'd slap you."

"Go ahead and thlap me," said Natalie, holding out her hand.

Elliott burrowed deeper into the bedclothes. "Aw, go on and leave me alone," he muttered.

This time his plea was successful. Natalie turned and stalked out of the room, pausing in the doorway just long enough to stick out her tongue at her unhappy victim.

Elliott didn't see her again till he was seventeen years old. He had planned to spend his entire vacation, thet Summer, touring the country with a friend in a rattle-trap stripped roadster for which he had paid fifty dollars But the friend had got the shingles: so early in August Elliott drove north to visit his parents, who had taken a cottage at Lord's Harbor. Mrs. Webster, now a widow, had owned a house in Lord's Harbor for years. Natalie and Elliott met again, and the consequences of that meeting were, to Elliott, even more serious than before.

He arrived at the harbor on a Thursday. The next morning, appearing on the beach in a brand-new, blue-and-white striped bething suit, he was hailed by a boy he knew, Jack Prescott, and presented to the Younger Set, who lay sprawled on the sand The Younger Set looked at Elliott, saw that he was tall and smiling and blue-eyed and husky, and said: "Hello!"

A Curly Blonde

ELLIOTT murmured a comprehensive "Hello!" in return and sat down between Jack Prescott and a girl in a flowered bathing suit. She had curly blonde hair and a beautiful tan.

"You don't remember me," she said. "But I remember you I ran into you once, on my sled, and broke your leg"

"Gee whis!" said Elliott. He looked in astonishment at the pretty face pillowed on the slim brown arms. Recognition stirred in him, and with it a confused sense of painful memories turned suddenly delightful. "Gee whis, was that you?"

"It certainly was," said the girl.

"Well, gee! What do you know about that?" said Elliott.

"It does seem sort of funny, doesn't it?"

"Gosh! Doesn't it? To think of me sitting down here beside you like this, without knowing who you were or anything—!"

"I knew you right away," said the girl.

"Natalie Webster!" exclaimed Elliott triumphantly. "Why, sure, I remember you now! Gee, it certainly is funny I mean, the way you meet people you haven't seen for years, and—I mean—

"I suppose life is full of the unexpected, isn't it? But I mean I think it's wonderful."

"I know what you mean," said Natalie.

"I think sometimes there must be something like Fate, or something that sort of brings two people together," said Elliott gravely. "But I don't know Maybe it's just an accident."

"It was, the first time we met," said Natalie, and they both laughed

"Seems a long time ago, doesn't it?"

"Perfect ages!" agreed the girl.

There was a silence, during which they studied each other with increasing interest.

"I guess, maybe, I better look out for you" finally observed Elliott, smiling boldly into the blue eyes turned toward him "I guess you're sort of a dangerous person"

"Why, I'm not, either I don't think that's nice."

Dangerous Beauty

"I MEAN, a beautiful woman is always dangerous," exclaimed Elliott, hoping that his air of sophistication would prove convincing.

"Oh," said Natalie. "I don't think I'm beautiful."

"You've got the bluest eyes I've ever seen. And the best tan. You've got a peach of a tan!" said Elliott.

"Do you think so? But I'm really quite discouraged about my looks, and I'm quite sincere when I say so."

"Listen," said seventeen to sixteen. "You're the prettiest girl I've almost ever met." (The slight reservation in this compliment would contribute, Elliott felt, to his standing as a man-of-the-world and a connoisseur of pretty women.) "But it isn't only looks thet count. It's fascination. I mean, I can see you've got fascination, all right. I bet you could do a lot of damage to a fellow, if he ever fell in love yith you, or anything like thet."

This startlingly original idea seemed to illumine Natalie's understanding.

"Oh, so that's what you meant when you said I was dangerous?"

"Sure! I meant, I guess I better look out, or I might get my heart broken, this time."

"But you're not going to fall in love with me," murmured Natalie.

"How do you know I'm not?"

"I can tell. A girl can always tell."

"Say!" protested Elliott. "I don't see how she can tell! I mean, if a fellow sort of feels thet he's going to fall in love with a girl, I guess he knows it, doesn't he?"

"Well, maybe," admitted Natalie; and added: "Maybe there is something like Fate that makes people do things, in spite of themselves."

"That's it," said Elliott.

"It's funny," continued the girl, "how you and I have started right off talking about life and—I mean—it's so nice to be able to talk to someone about the real things, and not just carry on a futile conversation about nothing at all, the way you have to do with most people"

Sick of Society

ELLIOTT said: "I bet you get tired of all this society here in Lord's Harbor. I mean, I bet you get pretty sick of it, don't you?"

She nodded, sighing

"We've been coming here for years. I'd rather travel, but Mother has so many friends here, and then the air is good for her. But it's all so terribly futile."

"That's right," he agreed. "That's just what it is. Say, listen, Natalie!"

"Yes, Elliott?"

"What do you say, if we walk up the beach and get away from these futile people?"

"All right," she said. "Let's!"

As they strolled along, she said: "I've always been awfully sorry I ran into you on my sled. I mean, it's always been sort of in the back of my mind."

"It has?" he asked softly.

"I remember it all so clearly," she went on, with a reminiscent shudder. "It happened on a Friday."

"It did?"

"Yes."

"Gosh!" exclaimed Elliott. "Today's Friday!"

The fact that today was Friday struck them both, suddenly, as an event of overwhelming significance.

Why should she cry? Was she not engaged to marry, within the next two weeks, Mr. Charles Grayson . . . one of the nicest men on earth?

"Natalie!" said Elliott, "I do believe it's Fate!"

"That afternoon they went driving in Elliott's roadster—an old-fashioned one. But it had a racy torpedo body, painted a dull red, and it had charm. Natalie said it looked like an airplane without wings. Elliott was overjoyed. He buoyantly confided to her that, when he was twenty-one, and had inherited the fortune that was coming to him from his grandmother's estate, he intended to buy a plane and spend the rest of his life in it.

"I'd rather fly than eat," said Elliott, as they drove down the long, curving drive thet led from the Webster cottage to the main road "I think it's almost the most wonderful thing a fellow can do."

"It would be fun," said Natalie "But you might fall, Elliott!"

"No, I won't!"

"Well, anyway, you'd better carry a parachute."

"Aw!" he said. "It would just be in the way"

"Elliott Crane, you promise me this minute that you'll carry a parachute!"

"Do you really want me to?" asked Elliott, thrilled by her concern.

"I certainly do!"

"Well, then, I will," he promised tenderly.

Casino Dance

THAT night they went to a dance at the Casino. Society, as Natalie said, might be futile, but it was also unescapable.

They danced well together. And, except when some foolish, futile youth like Jack Prescott cut in, Elliott thoroughly enjoyed himself.

"What are you laughing at, Prescott?" Elliott demanded, during a temporary sojourn in the stag-line.

"Listen, you egg," said Jack frivolously "You think you're good, don't you? But remember you have been here only one day. Wait till the novelty wears off, thet's all."

"You make me sick, Prescott."

"Yeah?" returned Prescott with his loathsome grin. "Just wait till Charley Grayson gets back. Then you'll have a little competition, all right."

"Who's he?" asked Elliott indifferently.

"Oh, he's going to marry Natalie some day. And wait until you see his aluminum-bodied roadster!"

He stepped out on the floor and authoritatively detached Natalie from the arms of her current partner.

"Look!" said Elliott, when they were dancing again. "I've heard something I wouldn't take seriously, except that it concerns my happiness I mean, Jack Prescott told me there was another man in your life—Charley Grayson."

Natalie said: "I've grown up with Charley . . . He's in town now He went down to see the fight. But he'll be back next week, and then you'll meet him. Elliott, and you'll like him, too"

"Sure," said Elliott. "I guess I'll like him, all right."

But his last waking thought that night was of Charley Grayson and his aluminum-bodied roadster.

Crushing Rush

THE first time he saw this car, Elliott was seized with a kind of vertigo. Driving to the beach one morning, he heard the supercilious chime of a French horn. The next instant the silvery body of the roadster shot past him with an effortless rush that was crushing And, to complete his humiliation, Natalie occupied the seat beside its driver.

"Hello, Elliott!" she called gaily, as the snobbish chariot rolled by.

Elliott's dislike of young Mr. Grayson turned to undying hatred. Shaking hands with him on the beach a few moments later, Elliott had an almost uncontrollable impulse to swing at the debonair Charley's jaw.

"I guess," he said to Natalie that evening, "you won't want to ride in that old tomato-can of mine, now thet you got a real car to ride around in."

"Oh, well, now—! That would be telling!" laughed Natalie. She felt an emotional crisis coming on, and, for some reason, not entirely clear to her, she wanted to avoid it.

Elliott's desire was obviously the contrary, but, before he could pursue his inquiry, the hateful sond of the French horn was heard. Elliott sat up with a jerk.

"What's that?" he demanded suspiciously.

"Why, it—it must be Charley!"

"Then I'll be going," announced Elliott.

But, at that moment, Charley Grayson appeared Immediately Elliott changed his mind. The sight of that cooly sauntering figure, meticulously garbed in dinner jacket and white flannels, aroused a demon of stubbornness in his breast. "I guess I'll stay, after all," he muttered to Natalie.

"Hello, Nat!" said Charley, advancing with outstretched hand. "Just dropped around to see if you wanted to take a ride. Didn't know you had company."

He looked at Elliott and nodded.

"Well!" said Natalie, cheerfully. "Let's sit down and—and do tell us about the fight, Charley Was Dempsey wonderful?"

"Wonderful!" said Charley. "That knockout punch was one of the prettiest blows I've ever seen struck in the ring"

"It was a left to the heart, wasn't it?" questioned Elliott coldly.

"No, he only feinted with his left."

On Safe Grounds

"WHAT do you mean, feinted, Charley?" said Natalie, who was nervously determined to keep the conversation on safe grounds.

"I'll show you," said Charley, and, squaring off in front of Elliott, he prepared to demonstrate the blow "You don't mind, do you, Crane?"

"Not at all," said Elliott.

Young Mr. Grayson said. "It was like this, Nat!" and started his left for Elliott's stomach The latter instinctively moved his hands to protect his solar plexus; whereupon Charley shot a neat right to Elliott's jaw.

"Ugh!" said that young man, recoiling

"Gosh, Crane, I'm sorry!" exclaimed Charley. "I didn't mean to hit you."

"That's all right, Grayson."

"My fist sort of slipped."

"Charley didn't mean to hit you, Elliott," put in Natalie, rather breathlessly.

"That's all right. It's a good blow," said Elliott. "But I don't think it's any better than the one this fellow Tunney uses."

"What's that?" asked Charley, unwarily

"It's a right to the heart—like this!" Very gently Elliott's fist landed on young Mr. Grayson's chest. "Then a quick short hook with the same hand to the jaw Then a left hook to the other side of the jaw—like this!"

And so saying, Elliott delivered himself of a blow that was not the disinterested scientific tap it should have been. Young Mr Grayson's head snapped back, his eyes blinked rapidly, and his mouth opened to utter an indignant, "Say!"

"Oh, Elliott!" gasped Natalie

But Elliott was innocently apologetic: "Gee, I'm sorry, Grayson. I guess my fist sort of slipped, too. Funny, isn't it? Just goes to show how hard it is for a fellow to pull his punches."

"That's right," said Charley, struggling to regain his composure.

"Well, don't let's have any more demonstrations!" said Natalie. "Let's just talk, or something"

Silent Audience

SO they sat down and talked That is, Natalie talked. Her two callers simply sat.

Another Friday dawned and presented a certain grave and delicate problem, with whom would she go to the dance that night?

On the beach that morning Elliott said to her: "This is Friday, you know!"

"Yes, I know," murmured Natalie

"I guess I don't have to say any more than that, do I? I mean, I guess you know what I mean."

"Well—but, Elliott—"

"This is our day, isn't it? Isn't it, Natalie?"

"Yes, Elliott."

"Let's take a walk up the beach, like we did a week ago"

"No, I—I'm sorry, but I don't think I can. You see, Mother isn't feeling very well."

"Oh, gee! But you'll go driving with me this afternoon, won't you?"

"Why, yes, I guess so. I guess Mother'll be all right by this afternoon. Now come on. Let's go in the ocean."

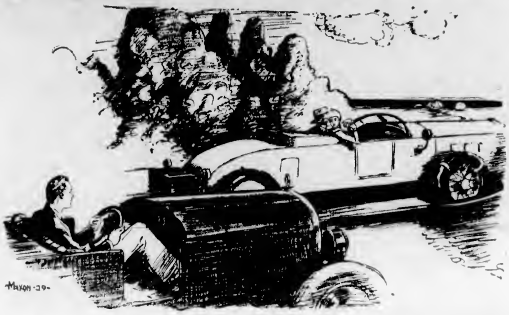
Returning to the bath-house, she met Charley Grayson in a dashing suit of bright orange. "Hello, Nat! Going to the dance with me tonight, aren't you?"

"Well, I—"

"You haven't promised anyone else, have you?"

"No. Not exactly," said Natalie, feeling that life was very difficult at times.

"Then you're going with me. I'll be around about eight-thirty," said Charley, with a masterful air thet to Natalie, in her present mood of indecision, seemed irresistible.



. . . the roadster shot past him with an effortless rush . . . to complete his humiliation, Natalie occupied the seat beside the driver.

But it wasn't easy to tell Elliott thet she was going to the dance with Charley. During the drive, she kept waiting for the right moment; but the right moment didn't manifest itself.

Ready for Crisis

AT eight-thirty that evening she was ready for whatever crisis Fate might have in store for her. After all, it could not be a very terrible crisis. . . .

At eight-thirty-five Charley Grayson arrived to take her to the Casino. "Want to drive?" he asked, as he helped her into the car

"All right," said Natalie, who, in times past, had found it thrilling to take the wheel of Charley's car But at this moment she wasn't thrilled. She was simply nervous She wanted to get to the Casino as quickly as possible. . .

At eight-forty Natalie was urging the powerful roadster swiftly down the drive. At eight-forty-one she rounded a curve and crashed head-on, with a fearful impact, into Elliott Crane's car.

She had one glimpse of Elliott's face; she saw the startled, stricken look in his eyes. His eyes seemed to stare at her with wild accusation. . . . Then that awful noise And then chaos. . . .

Natalie had closed her eyes at the crash. Now she opened them and saw Charley Grayson kneeling beside the prone figure of Elliott, who lay on the ground.

"Is he dead?" asked Natalie, in a strained, unnatural voice.

Charley said "Oh, I don't think so!"

Then Elliott's voice, strangely calm in the darkness. "No, I'm not dead . . . It's just my shoulder, I think. . . . You can't kill a guy on his lucky day!" And he made a sound like a laugh.

Natalie began to sob hysterically.

Twenty-four hours later, Elliott was in a hospital The doctor assured his parents thet he had suffered no more injury than a broken collar bone. Elliott did not correct the doctor But he knew of a wound thet had escaped the physician's limited observation. After all, broken hearts are harder to diagnose than broken collar bones.

One day during his convalescence he was reading a book on aviation, when a letter arrived from Lord's Harbor. Natalie Webster's monogram was on the envelope. Elliott, with cool deliberation, destroyed the letter, unopened, and went on reading

He did not see Natalie again until he was twenty-five years old.

Magnificent View

THE view from the side porch of the Webster cottage, in Lord's Harbor, is magnificent. But its magnificence on a certain noontide in August, eight years later, apparently did not interest Miss Natalie Webster, who, lying on a couch, her face buried in its pillows, wept gently. In her hand she clutched a crumpled telegram, received a few minutes before After reading this telegram, she had begun to cry. Yet, strangely enough, she herself did not understand exactly why she was crying.

Why should she cry? Was she not engaged to marry, within the next two weeks, Mr. Charles Grayson, now a multimillionaire in his own right and one of the nicest men on earth? Was not her mother at this moment in New York making the final selections for her trousseau, and wasn't everything just simply splendid?

"Oh, yet, it is! And I'm a fool!" Natalie told herself. "More than that, I'm twenty-four years old" This reflection sobered her. She dried her eyes. Then, hearing a faint, steady humming in the sky looked seaward and beheld an airplane flying low above the coast.

But though the passing of an airplane was a familiar sight, Natalie now recalled, mechanically, the fragment of a conversation that invariably occurred to her when she saw one of these man-made darning-needles plunging through space. . . . "Elliott Crane, you promise me this minute that you'll carry a parachute!"

"Well, gee, if that's the way you feel about it, Natalie. . . ."

A man came around the corner of the porch and walked toward her.

"Hello, Natalie," he said.

She sat up and looked at him.

"Hello," she said. "Elliott—?"

She smiled faintly. She sat there, looking at him with a faint, wondering smile. Then she made a little gesture.

"Sit down," she said, "and tell me all about it."

He sat down on the couch beside her.

"Well," he said. "I'll tell you. . . . But it's sort of crazy. . . . I mean, you may think I'm a bit cuckoo."

"No, I won't. Anyway, it doesn't matter."

"Well, it's funny. . . . But you see I've been thinking about you a good deal lately. . . . I mean, I knew you were engaged to Charley Grayson, and this morning I saw your wedding plans announced in the paper."

"Yes?"

Auspicious Date

WHEN I happened to glance up at the date, and—! Do you know what day this is, Natalie?"

"What day? Why, it's—"

"It's Friday, the thirteenth of August," said Elliott, and grinned at her.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Natalie. "So it is! And you—you flew up here on Friday, the thirteenth—?"

"Sure Don't you remember how I used to say that Friday was my lucky day?"

"I remember—" began Natalie; then she paused and looked at the view, which seemed to her to be unusually bright just then.

"I remember you never answered the letter I wrote you when you were in the hospital thet time."

"No," said Elliott. "I tore up thet letter I was through with you. At least, I thought I was."

She said, without reflection: "And weren't you?"

"I was not," he answered simply. "I've thought of you steadily for eight years. . . . I've carried you around in my mind all that time. . . . You see, I really loved you. And if you think I'm being a poor sport to tell you so now, when you're engaged to Charley Grayson, then you'll just have to go ahead and think so I flew up here from New York to tell you I still love you."

"You do?"

"I do," said Elliott, and putting out his hand, touched her wrist. "But don't worry about it. All you've got to do is to tell me you're happy. . . . I mean, happy about marrying Grayson Are you happy about that, Natalie? Let me look at you."

"No!"

"Why not?"

"No, I won't!"

But the pressure of his hand on her arm was somehow compelling. She turned toward him, defiantly.

"You look as though you'd been crying," he said, after a moment's critical scrutiny.

"Well, I have," admitted Natalie.

"Then you can't be so happy!"

"Why, yes, I am. It's just thet—" Natalie stopped groping for some logical reason why she should have been crying. Suddenly she was aware of the telegram.

"You see," she said picking it up and wadding it into a tight yellow ball.

Convenient Telegram

"YOU see, I've just had a telegram from Mother She's in New York, buying some things for my trousseau, and she—she isn't well. I mean she's ill. I mean she was taken ill today—this morning—quite suddenly, and I—she —"

"Why, thet's too bad, Natalie. What's the matter with her? Nothing serious, I hope?"

"I don't know," said Natalie "She didn't say But I feel that I ought to be with her, and—you see, there's no train till this evening And so I cried"

"Gee, I don't blame you."

She turned impulsively and faced him

"Oh, Elliott!" she begged. "Do take me to New York in your plane! I must be with Mother! I simply must!"

"My word!" said Elliott. "Take you to New York? In my ship? On Friday, the thirteenth!"

"But you flew up here on Friday, the thirteenth"

"Yes, I know, but—! Gee I'd do anything in the world for you, Natalie and I don't give a darn about myself . But since we've known each other, we've had two accidents, each on a Friday—and you know they say the third accident is fatal"

Natalie sprang to her feet.

"I don't care if they do! I mean, I don't care what happens. I want to go to New York, and I want you to take me."

"But, Natalie —"

"Why, it's like a miracle your turning up here today. Say you'll take me, Elliott. Please say you will?"

Some forty-five minutes later she looked down from the passenger's seat in Elliott's silver plane and saw Lord's Harbor laid out in a neat pattern far, far below her. Friday, the thirteenth! She glanced around at Elliott in the pilot's cockpit behind her. He smiled and waved his hand reassuringly. The roar of the motor drowned her answering shout.

"I'm not afraid!" But she was afraid, and knew it.

Safely Landed

How Loss of Sight Makes Blind More Skillful

SUPPOSE that you should become totally blind as the result of an accident or disease, just how would you meet such a great misfortune? Experience shows that in the event of any great disaster there are those who are overwhelmed and crushed by it; others resent it and vainly fight against it; but still others accept it as a challenge and rise superior to it.

Which one of these three would you be?

How the force of such a blow may be lightened if a person is in some degree prepared for it and given an opportunity to become adjusted to new conditions and to carry on with more limited equipment, is set forth in Hygeia by Dr. Park Lewis, vice-president of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness.

"Of all the evils to which we are subject," says Dr. Lewis, "there are few that excite greater apprehension than the consciousness of oncoming blindness. The reaction to which this knowledge gives rise is largely conditioned by the temperament and former habits of the individual. To the average man or woman to whom the possibility of such an impending calamity has never occurred, the first impression is one of terror, an unreasoning fear of being left in permanent darkness.

"It is of the greatest importance, therefore, that the psychology of those over whom blindness is pending be recognized by their friends and household associates, for on them will rest much of the responsibility of guiding the patient as a doctor might through a difficult and trying period. The person should prepare for the oncoming of blindness as he makes ready for any other great adventure. If the blindness is temporary, such as comes during the inception of developing cataracts, the fact must be made clear that many people go for years with partial sight without seriously interfering with their daily avocations. This will give a degree of confidence and assurance that will help to keep up the morale when the darker days come.

"The things that may be done by those with exceedingly limited sight are surprisingly numerous. It will be a wholesome and diverting exercise for the intelligent man or woman who feels that his eyes are ceasing to be dependable to devise new methods of keeping in touch with former activities.

"With the blind, concentration comes more easily. They have not the multitude of visual distractions that are constantly luring the sighted from one object to another. No one will for a moment think that the loss of sight is not a tremendous misfortune, but the brave soul can be helped to use it to his advantage. Certain things he must continue to do and these are as far as possible all of the things he has heretofore been in the habit of doing.

Apparatus for writing without seeing
The fingers touch the side pins before the edge is reached.
The ruler guides the hand.

Many chess experts prefer to play blindfolded so that they can develop an unusual degree of concentration by visualizing every move on the board and thus clearly picture the whole game in the mind.

This apparatus enables the blind to write on paper. Its operation is explained by the writing shown in the drawing.

"A better game of chess can be played with the eyes closed than with them open because by visualizing the moves on the board the whole game may be pictured in the mind; with dominoes and checkers the same is true. The blind play cards with interest and satisfaction by having the designations pricked with a pin in a corner of the card. These may readily be read by touch. It is necessary only that each player name his card as he lays it on the table. This requires, of course, an unusual degree of concentration, but it is a delightful mental exercise for those of trained mind. A multitude of mechanical things may be satisfactorily done by those without sight."

Science has come to the aid of the sightless with several inventions of devices that serve as eyes and enable the blind to read and write.

The Braille system of raised letters, which has long been used, is now a "back number" as the result of the perfection of novel apparatus that enables the blind to "read" any printed matter.

All that the blind reader has to do is to distinguish between a buzz and a silence, or between vibration and no vibration, any intensity of signal being used. A grooved guide is provided which has five steps. These are sharply defined, although they are only one-sixty-fourth of an inch high.

The blind reader moves the feeler over these steps, which tell him what portion of a letter he is on. If a buzz is heard in the speaker or phones it indicates a white portion, and if nothing is heard a black.

From this combination of information he mentally reconstructs the shape of the letter. He does not trace the entire letter because certain characteristics are all that are necessary.

When in use the printed matter is placed in a holder and a light ray about five one-thousandths of an inch in diameter is projected down on to the printed page. A selenium cell is provided to pick up the reflected light rays, which are correspondingly changed into electrical impulses.

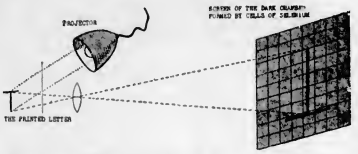

Diagram of a new printing device for the blind. Each letter of a printed paper is placed on a revolving carriage and passed before a projector. Its image takes shape in a dark cell of selenium. They are electrically bound to metallic stems which produce the letter in the corresponding Braille character.

In forming, for example, the letter H the operator begins at the left-hand side of the grooved guide and draws the feeler down over the strips. As he does then the light ray on the other end of a pantograph traverses the black line on the left leg of the letter. There is no sound, so that the operator knows he has struck part of the letter.

Then he moves the rod slightly to the right and draws it straight down. A buzz is heard all the way down, except for an instant of silence in the middle. No letter but H is similar to this, so he readily recognizes it.

The operator reads the other letters in the same manner, and as practice is acquired various short cuts can be employed.

"It is easy, did we but know it, to write with the eyes blindfolded," Dr. Lewis continues. "Some little auxiliaries are necessary, but those who are accustomed to using a pen or a pencil can continue to do so without watching the formation of the words.

"Writing without seeing the ruled lines on the page or indeed writing on paper without rulings is much more easily accomplished than one would imagine. For practical purposes it is better to use a pad with sufficient paper to make the edges readily apparent to the fingers. Vertical in preference to slanting letters should be employed.

"A rubber band is passed over the pad at just such a distance as will bring the pencil point where the writing should begin. Two other light bands are passed vertically around the pad at about half an inch from each edge of the paper. As each line is completed the horizontal band is slipped down an inch. The resistance of the vertical band striking the pencil point gives warning that the edge of the paper is near, but leaves sufficient space to finish the word begun. By keeping the little finger on the horizontal band (a ruler will serve equally as well) even and legible writing may be produced with little practice. If this practice is begun before sight wholly fails great facility may be developed."

From Homer down through Milton to the present day are the records of numberless men and women who have made of their misfortune an asset rather than a liability.

The pupils in the New York School for the Blind at Batavia compete successfully in debates, in musical performances and even in athletics with those of corresponding age in the city schools and have won several goblets or trophies of their ability.

Recently there was witnessed a most amazing exhibition in the New York Institute for the Blind. In one of the daily classes were gathered children from twelve to thirteen years of age who were fairly representative of the ordinary East Side child. They were given three numbers at random which anyone might choose, and they were directed to multiply these by three other numbers such as 972 and 628. Problems like this the class did aloud in concert without the intervention of their raised point slates. They were able to do this just as quickly and quite as accurately as any sighted person.

These children are taught the multiplication table not only through the twelves, but through the twenty-fives. In this was demonstrated a degree of concentration that is not exceeded, if it is equaled, by children of their age anywhere.

New Light on Ex-Kaiser's Idea of Abdication

RECENTLY the Berliner Tageblatt made public an important historical document, throwing light on the ex-Kaiser's attitude toward a possible abdication a week before he sought refuge in Holland.

It has been represented in the Crown Prince's memoirs and elsewhere that the abdication demand was a shocking surprise to the Hohenzollern family—that the Kaiser yielded because he had made no sufficient mental or other preparation to resist sudden pressure of this sort. But in the light of this document he had ample warning of the situation which was found to develop as soon as Prince Max, of Baden Ministry, opened armistice negotiations with President Wilson and was confronted with the latter's refusal to deal with a government of which William II remained the head.

The present revelation comes in the form of a reproduction of a conversation with the ex-Kaiser held by the court preacher, the Rev. Dr. Vogel, on November 3, 1918, at grand headquarters at Spa, Belgium. Dr. Vogel was an intimate friend of the Kaiser, accompanied him to Holland and later officiated at the religious ceremony of Wilhelm II's betrothal to his present wife. He has often been invited to conduct religious services at Doorn.

The summary of the interview was furnished to The Tageblatt, it says, by Herr Heinrich Peterineyer. It unveils the ex-monarch's mind a few days before his flight and especially emphasizes his complete undervaluation of the popular support behind the desire for his disappearance from the scene.

He plainly contemplated suppressing a revolutionary movement, marching to Berlin and reducing that city to submission, even if he had to bombard his own Berlin castle in the process. In this interview the ex-Kaiser's weaknesses of judgment and character—including his essential light-mindedness—are again most strikingly illustrated.

The document written by Dr. Vogel reads: "On November 3, 1919, I preached for the last time a sermon in the field at which the Kaiser was present. Immediately after the sermon I had a conversation with the Kaiser which lasted more than an hour and which I at once transcribed. The Kaiser said to me:

"'It was nice of you that you preached to me on the Seventy-Fifth Psalm. I have occupied myself a great deal with that Psalm and with the 119th; that was Luther's Psalm, it is my Psalm. Yes, it is really wonderful how men 5,000 years ago went through the same thing as we of today have gone through. I have also gone through much. Did you catch what I said?

"'Day before yesterday Drews was here, on the part of the Government, the so-called Government, to suggest to me nothing less than my abdication. I first let him come out with it; then I sized the man up—looked at him this way and said: "What? Do you, a Prussian official and subject, who have taken the oath of allegiance to your king, dare to approach me with such a proposal?"

"'You should have seen how the man went to pieces. He had not expected that. He immediately became a humble servant again. "But," said I, "let us assume that I do abdicate, what do you think would happen then? You are an administrative officer. You must therefore be able to understand things and to look ahead. How do you think matters would turn out? My sons have given me their word that none of them will take my place, so with me the whole house of Hohenzollern would go out."

"'You should have seen his terror. He had never expected that, and the whole smart Government in Berlin had not, either. "And who is to take over the regency for my twelve-year-old grandson? The Imperial Chancellor? I have heard from Munich that they have no idea of recognizing him as such. So what will happen?" "'Chaos'," he said, and again became very humble.

"'You see, you have only to question such empty heads and their confusion and brainlessness becomes evident.

"'"Well, now," I continued, "I am going to tell you what this chaos means, if you look at it more closely. I abdicate—I and my whole house—and all the German dynasties fall with me. The army has no leader, the front melts away and the forces at the front flow back across the Rhine.

"'"The disloyal band together, hang, murder and plunder and thereby help the enemy. The loyal go, perhaps, to Berlin and overthrow you and the whole Government, who are unable to help themselves. Therefore, I have no idea of abdicating. The King of Prussia may not be disloyal to Germany, least of all at this moment. I do not think of abandoning the throne because of a few hundred Jews and a couple of thousand workmen! Tell that to your masters in Berlin!"

"'Then, as he was about to go I said: "Wait a minute; the Field Marshal and the Quartermaster General would also like to talk to you."

"'Hindenburg then talked to him and said the same things—very emphatically. And then Groener. Groener is a Wurttemberger and a South German, not a Prussian—a small, genial man. Since the beginning of the war I have worked with him very gladly. He smokes his cigar and always has a pleasant smile. How shall I put it? He goes for Drews like a wildcat; he roars at him so loudly—this little, kindly man—that my people away back in the park heard him.

"'As Drews then withdrew, very crestfallen, I gave him two copies of Doehring's sermon, which has now been printed by the thousand and distributed—one for him and one for the Imperial Chancellor. "There," I said, "take this along, and may the gentlemen study it and read over and over again what it says about German loyalty."

"'I may have ruled as I willed, and either well or badly, let us now leave that entirely aside. But I am sixty years old and have sat for thirty years on the throne. One thing you must concede to me. I have experience beyond anybody else's and, besides, who in the world is there to take my place? Perhaps the famous Max of Baden, who is working for the regency or the presidency?

"'Doesn't he know that he will be the first one to be chased out by his own Government? They sit together in Berlin and hold conferences and their heads only get thicker. None of them knows what he wants.

"'There is David (a Socialist Deputy), for example—a very clever man—no Jew. No, no, don't get that idea! The son of a pastor, educated by a superintendent, but full of the brotherhood of man and cosmopolitan ideas. Yet he is a good fellow. There is Giesberts, the leader of the Catholics, of the Catholic labor unions—for such a man one can be thankful.

"'But the others! At the head of them Max of Baden. I talked with him recently. I had considered every word I said and weighed it carefully. I wished to have a speech of mine printed as an appeal to the people. No, that was not done, it was not possible, and still isn't. Well, we shall see how things come out. It has always been my motto: Wait, let things take their course.

"'As the Lord says in the parable of the tares and the wheat—"Let them both grow up together!" Now let the whole excitement run its course so that all the people may see clearly where they are going. I understand the present feeling very well. Everything was so beautifully parceled out—all of Belgium, Northern France, etc. The iron and steel industries had already laid claim to I don't know what.

"'Now things are changed, and, naturally, now they complain. As if it were my fault! And think of this, the Rhineland heavy industry, which I have reared from the smallest beginnings, is now dealing with the Entente to get a good place without me. If they are to get a worse one with me, they will throw me out.

"'Now they demand that I come to Berlin. I have sat there for six weeks, absolutely useless. I have telephoned Max: "What is there for me to do here? With all the notes which you compose you haven't once asked my advice, everything is done without consulting me. I waited for three-quarters of an hour at the instrument. Yes, I might go on waiting there. But I have no such intention. As Supreme War Lord I shall return to the front today."

"'That angered them, naturally, for they know well enough that they can do nothing without the army. Linsingen is in Berlin with loyal troops and the other big cities are similarly held. We shall send more troops, and I say to you that if the least thing happens then I shall write an answer on the pavement with machine guns, even if I must destroy my own castle. Order must be maintained.

"'I don't know what God will do with me, but this I do know, that the Highest wishes me to do my duty and follow the path of my conscience. The whole trouble comes from Berlin. The people have no idea of making a revolution. I receive thousands of letters daily, whole bundles of telegrams, which express devotion and loyalty to me.'"

Talented Children

THE children of Thomas Mann, the famous German novelist, have inherited some of his literary talent. Klaus, who has already published a novel and some short stories, and his sister Erika have written an account of their travels round the world.

An ex-colonel was playing a round of golf. He was playing very badly, and presently noticed a man watching him.

"What the deuce are you looking at?" thundered the colonel.

"Looking at?" answered the man. "I'm not looking. I'm listening."

Dry Powdered Soap in Air Found Highly Explosive

SOAP, under proper conditions, is just about as explosive as dynamite. It has to be dried, powdered and blown into a cloud in the air, but once it gets in that shape, all who enter its presence should beware.

Further, if it is swirled around in its dusty form, it will provide its own detonating apparatus, since the dry brushing particles will excite tiny, sparkling electric currents and fire the whole mess.

The discovery of these odd propensities in soap can be attributed to the United States Bureau of Mines, which has been following a long trail of facts about dust since it found a few years ago that the tragic explosions in coal mines were due to the presence of coal dust in the air of the galleries.

After devising a method of rock dusting mines to keep down the danger of underground explosions, the bureau found a number of other industrial points, like flour mills, where ordinarily inert dust was proving to be a source of mystifying and most expensive outbreaks.

Soap, however, is the latest and oddest of the list of commodities with tendencies to cause trouble. The bureau explains that there is no danger in soap powder around a house or any other place where its quantity is slight. The trouble is in the factory, where powdered soap is made or in the warehouse where it is packed. It is the dusty, dry cloud of the powder inside a grinding machine or hanging in a storeroom which has been proved likely to go off.

A recent publication of the bureau, brought out for soap handlers, describes some of the precautions which can be taken to reduce the hazard.

Old Trees Yield Cork

ALTHOUGH cork is used in increasing quantities each year, the cork oak needs from twenty to forty years to produce a bark of commercial value. In some of the countries bordering in the Mediterranean, where the tree originated, the forests are all of wild growth, in others they are highly cultivated. When the tree is about forty years old it begins to produce its best bark, and continues productive for almost a century.

Not for "John D."

AN amusing story comes from New York concerning the veteran John D. Rockefeller, reputedly the richest man in the world. It appears that the multimillionaire, creator of the Standard Oil Trust, recently had his portrait painted for presentation to a certain public institution. It was a water color. "Of course," remarked one of his business rivals when viewing the picture for the first time, "of course, it had to be a water color. They couldn't 'do' Rockefeller in oil."

Third Accident

tion was the hotel where Mrs. Webster was staying. Elliott told the driver to hurry.

"You'll be with your mother before long now," he said, and added cheerfully: "Well, I got you this far, anyway."

"Elliott, it was simply wonderful!"

"You weren't frightened, were you?"

"I was thrilled! I mean, I loved every minute of it. I mean——"

"Well," he said, "if this taxi bird doesn't wrap us around an elevated pillar or something——"

"Oh, don't Elliott! Don't mention it!"

"All right, dear. I've got my fingers crossed," Elliott assured her.

Had he said "dear?" Natalie looked at him and decided he had said "dear." There was, something—a certain expression in his eyes——

Bang went one of the front tires on the taxi. The driver pulled his crippled car into the curb and stopped.

"Blow-out," said Elliott. "Just a blow-out, that's all. We'll get another cab."

"No," said Natalie.

"Why not?"

"Well, it would be such a bother. And besides, isn't that a restaurant across the street? Let's go get something to eat."

She got out of the cab and started across the street. Elliott, slightly bewildered, followed her. They entered the restaurant and Natalie sat down at a table.

"But you—aren't you in a hurry to get to your Mother?"

"No," said Natalie. "I'm not. I've deceived you about that, Elliott. So you better sit down and order something, too."

"Natalie, what are you driving at? What do you mean you've deceived me?"

"Oh, my dear," she said. "Do sit down, and I'll try to tell you. But don't be cross with me, because it's much more difficult than you know . . . Here's the telegram I received this morning from Mother. You can read that first."

Heavenly Peignoir

SHE took the yellow wad of paper out of her purse and gave it to him. He smoothed it out and read: "Have just bought heavenly peignoir peacock blue with ermine trimmings your trousseau almost complete expect to be home Sunday my neuralgia better love Mother."

Elliott looked up from the telegram, a dazed expression in his eyes.

"Why," he said. "Your Mother isn't sick at all!"

"No. Mother isn't sick. I just invented her illness, because——"

"Because you what?" demanded Elliott sternly.

"Because I was so frightfully unhappy," said Natalie in a low voice that suddenly set his nerves tingling.

"Darling!" he exclaimed. "I'm so glad! I mean, I'm glad, if you mean what I think you mean."

"Well, I do," she said. "You see, I've always liked Charley, but, after I'd promised to marry him—well, I knew then that I didn't love him. Oh, I've always known I didn't love him! I love you, Elliott, and if you hadn't been such an idiot and torn up that letter I wrote to you when you were in the hospital with a broken collar bone, you'd have known it eight years ago."

"Natalie!" cried Natalie, seizing her hands across the table. "I know it now, and that's enough. Because I simply adore you!"

"Well, I'm glad you do," said Natalie, "because I'm planning to marry you as soon as possible. Say first thing in the morning. Then I'll have to see Mother about that blue peignoir—and several other matters. I'm afraid Mother's neuralgia will be worse when she finds out I've eloped with you. Because that's what we've done, darling, though I don't think you quite realize it—yet."

"Sweetheart!" said Elliott, recklessly kissing her hands. "I do realize it! Gee! Didn't I tell you Friday was my lucky day? And to think our meeting again was really nothing but an accident!"

"The third accident," said Natalie softly.

"Sure. The fatal one."

"Are you quite sure it's fatal, Elliott?"

"Well," said Elliott, rising and starting around the table. "We're going to marry each other, aren't we?"

The Devil's Masterpiece

By REV. DR. B. KETCHEN

When I take seven shots in a bunker
And the ball still remains in the sand,
And I struggle in vain with myself to retain
A bit of the old self-command,
I wonder why Job wasn't tempted
By the evil and crafty old Nick
To imperil his soul while he stood in a hole
And cuffed at a pill with a stick.

Yes, Job remained gentle and patient
And his piety stuck to him—but
He might have been led to go clear off his head
If he'd foozled a seven-inch putt.
Old Satan was shrewd and ingenious;
He possessed an unlimited power—
By scheme and by trick—all a little bit thick
To make people's temper go sour.
But Job remained proof to all ruses
Though he might have shown even some pique,
And perhaps have seen red if he'd lifted his head
And driven four shots in the creek.

Job proved far too good for the devil
To lead in the pathway of wrong
He could patiently smile at the master of guile
And still remain noble and strong
But the tempter at last has grown wiser,
With a meadow and eighteen small holes
He has built a device which will amply suffice
To cost us poor moderns our souls.

Turkish Music

THE Stamboul Musicians' Union, in order to improve the music of Turkey, has persuaded the municipality to suppress all musicians unless they hold certificates of ability. The Turkish police have been thorough in enforcing the law, even holding up concerts while in full swing in order to demand certificates from the members of the orchestras. The police, it is reported, have even demanded certificates from the gypsy tambourine shakers and reed players who entertain in the lower types of cabarets.

Antics of Peanut and Popcorn

Related by Peanut

"CLEAN apple skins," children. We never leave a bit of apple when we get one to eat, I can tell you. They cost money now, as apple season is nearly over. I was talking through the wire to Cora, the Barred Rock hen, and she tells me that her groceries are getting dearer all the time

Mysterious Carrying-Ons

THERE has been some very queer things happen around here lately. As Pop is sleeping or huddling up in the bedroom nearly all the time now, owing to losing his fur coat, I haven't anybody to tell things to, so I will tell you all about these, happenings. One morning we suddenly misses Galli Curci, the singing hen of the yard, and next morning I saw the boss bring her out of the basement, put her on the ground, give her a drink of water and some grain and then pick her up again and take her back. I asked Cora what was the matter, and she said that Galli had been arrested for being broody, and was imprisoned in the basement. She has been locked up in a dark box for days, and only gets out to eat daily for a few minutes. I asked why did not the boss get P.C. Pook to take her to the police station, but Cora said that the boss does not want the disgrace in the family.

Well, my Easter holiday was completely spoilt for me by that brother of mine. He has lost all his coat, and only has a little fur left on his tail and his head. His body was absolutely white for three days, and then it turned blue black, as his new coat is beginning to show through. It will take about three weeks to grow another coat, and in the meanwhile I am unable to take him anywhere. I had wanted to go and see the children at the Orphanage on Hillside during the holidays, but now I have to nurse Pop. It was so cold when it snowed that I phoned to the Employment Bureau and got a man to come up and tack a sack over the front of our house. It protects Pop from the wind when he comes out to eat.

The First Sympathisers

ON Easter Sunday the first callers were Stuart Turner and his sister Dorothy, and they brought us two lovely baskets of peanuts, and each one had writing on. The baskets were hand-made and we were very much pleased. Then a very fair man and a dark young lady came. When they called the boss and family had gone to the service up Mount Tolmie. Cora described the young lady to the boss and he said "I guess that would be Majolica," a nickname for Madge.

Do you know Pop and I fear the worst has happened to Galli, as she has not been out for two days and Pop says he heard the boss in the basement, and he believes the boss was holding Galli by the throat because she was making a choking noise like "Clock, clock, ker-clock." Then her voice got very tiny and thin, and sounded like "Cheep, cheep." Pop said he was going to find out just what was happening in the basement, and when the boss fed us at noon, Pop raced through the trap door, without his coat on, and ran for the basement door. He could not open it, so started to chew it, but the boss picked him up and said, "Now, sonny, you mustn't be so inquisi—(you know). You will see Galli soon, as her sentence is nearly finished." Cora says it is nothing to worry about. Just fancy if we got put in a prison for twenty-one days, and only came out for one feed a day. We would starve; I'm sure of it.

You will remember Pop telling about the eggs in a big box in the basement? Well, Freddie Johnson came over to see us, and the boss showed him the eggs in the box, and he asked his mother to let him stay in bed for three weeks with some eggs so he could hatch them. The lady said it would be too much bother

Kindly Inquiries

THE boss was over in Vancouver last week and he said that the young lady, Miss Emma Petere, asked very kindly after our welfare. She was the lady in the restaurant who gave the boss some bread and milk for us when we were so young and hungry. We are going to send her our photo.

"The disappearance of Galli, or the basement mystery," is still keeping Pop and I wondering. Every time the boss goes in there or comes out, someone upstairs shouts "Be sure and shut the door," or "Don't let Galli out." We do hope nothing terrible will happen. Cora told me yesterday that Galli's trouble has upset everything in her set. They were going to a bridge party today, and then they were going to a dry goods store to match some silk for an evening dress. They have been used to doing their shopping in the morning, and then going to the bargain moving pictures.

The boss has just shown me a piece in Sunday's Colonist, right on the front page, about a squirrel biting seven people, and then being shot by a policeman. Isn't it terrible? I told him that if they have been hunting the squirrel with cats and dogs, and all the boys in the neighborhood have been throwing stones at the squirrel, then it is not surprising if the squirrel bit any of those that he could get close to. The boss said he had a pet red squirrel in Toronto years ago, and used to take it to Riverside Park on Sundays and let it climb trees, and there used to be so many children watching that people would rush up to see what was the matter. The pet was called Jacko, and would go in the boss' pocket when he walked home. One day, in the garden, it tried to be cheeky to a big cat, and the cat gave it a tap on the side of the head, and Jacko never recovered. That reminds me, Bruce Greene's cat has been around lately. It is called "Stubbie" because it has no tail. I told Pop that I do not trust it. It sits and watches us for long periods (that is a big word for me, eh, children?).

The Mystery Solved

WHAT do you think? They have built a new house right next door to us, and Mrs. Galli has moved in with twenty-five children. There are yellow ones, black ones and some pretty striped brown ones. Night and morning the boss puts them in a basket and puts them in the house. At nights he takes them back to the basement, because it is too cold to leave them out. Just fancy, they were only two days old when the snow came, and the boss put them outdoors. The water was frozen, but they ran under Galli every few minutes and got warm. The boss says little animals are well dressed for cold weather and should not be coddled.

Noise of Chicks

CORA has only been to see her once. She told me she cannot bear the noise of the chicks. Of course, it is not my affair, but I told her I thought it was not good for Galli to encourage her children to eat worms and grubs whilst they are so young. The boss gave them some little grubs which he found in a tin of rice, and they grabbed them and ran and fought just like cannibals. I think it is just terrible to start young children off like that.

Mildred Greene came on Sunday after church and brought two lady friends to see me. One was very young. She had to be lifted on a box to see me. The boss walked away and smiled when I asked him if he would get a little visitors' book for the children to register in when they call. He said, "Why, Missy, I guess you will need visiting cards next," and I told him that Cora had mentioned about this very thing to me only the other day. He said with walnuts at fifty cents a pound and oranges and apples expensive, he would have to think seriously of the matter. He told me that the little boss John was making a whirligig for us. Now what in the world is a whirligig? I mentioned it to Cora, and she laughed and said, "It is one of those things where you keep going round and round, but do not get anywhere."

We want to thank Frank Davey and Miss Iris Kerr, and that young rascal Alf, for inquiring after Pop's health during his enforced stay at home in bed. We have found out where he got the varnish from. It was in a tin which also contained some crankcase oil and disinfectant for the chicken house.

Pop has been writing some more poetry and I am writing out the best piece herewith

"I'm sitting here in my mossy bed,
With very little fur upon my head,
I will soon grow a nice new coat,
And quit looking like a half starved goat."
—Pop, the Poet.

What Fabre Proved

THE great French naturalist, Fabre, proved that the ordinary domed meat guard of wire gauze will not always protect meat against the grubs of the bluebottle, and never against the grubs of the grey fly

The bluebottle will lay its eggs outside the wire gauze cover if the meat is near it, and the grub, when hatched, will creep in through the tiny holes

The grey fly produces its grubs alive and will deposit them through the holes in the gauze.

Fabre found that if he put a dead bird in a tin box and left the lid open so little that only the point of a fine needle could be introduced, the bluebottle would lay eggs close to the minute opening in the lid that admittance might be gained.

The one way of preserving meat or game from flies is to enclose it in a paper bag, and furs are only safe against the ravages of moths by placing them in large paper bags

A Girl Guide's Prayer

TEACH us, O Lord, that every day is a fresh beginning, every morning a world made new. Help us to leave behind the mistakes and failures of yesterday and in Thy strength to go out today determined to love and to serve in Thy spirit. Whatever our difficulties may be let us never depress others, remembering always that as Guides we must spread happiness all along the way. Amen.

Sing a Little Song

Sing, I pray, a little song,
Mother dear!
Neither sad nor very long
It is for a little maid,
Golden-tressed Adelaide!
Therefore let it suit a merry, merry ear,
Mother dear!

Let it be a merry strain,
Mother dear!
Shunning e'en the thought of pain:
For our gentle child will weep
If the theme be dark and deep;
And we will not draw a single tear,
Mother dear!

Childhood shall be all divine,
Mother dear!
And like endless Summer shine;
Gay as Edward's shouts and cries,
Bright as Agnes' azure eyes,
Therefore let thy song be merry; dost thou hear,
Mother dear?

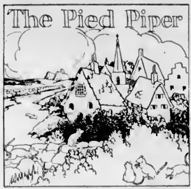
The Story of the Pied Piper

By M. GENEVIEVE SILVESTER

MAKE-A-BOOK—Save the twelve pictures that tell this story to make a book. Cut them out and paste them on white paper. You will then have a complete story. Cut a cover from stiff paper, and sew the pages of the book into it with a big, strong stitch.



Once upon a time ever and ever so long ago there was a beautiful town called Hamelin.

The people who lived in this pretty little town loved their homes very much and would have been as happy as could be if the town had not been overrun with rats.

The rats! The rats! The rats!
"They fought the dogs and killed the cats,
And bit the babies in the cradles,
And ate the cheeses in the vats,
And licked the soup from the cooks' own ladles;
Made nests in men's Sunday hats,
And even spoiled women's chats
By drowning their speaking
With shrieking and squeaking."

An English King of Long Ago—Alfred the Great

IT is more than a thousand years since Alfred, surnamed The Great, died. Every child knows the story of the burnt cakes and most of you have learned that King Alfred was a splendid soldier and a wise statesman. The story of his life was told long ago by Asser, a Welsh bishop, who lived in his own time and met him very often. Reading his story one wonders whether in this Twentieth Century, with all its knowledge, all its discoveries and all its inventions, a man is to be found as truly great as was Alfred of the West Saxons. Asser wrote:

"Amid the wars and many hindrances of this present life, and amid the assaults of the pagans and his daily illness, the king ceased not from the governance of the kingdom and from the pursuit of every form of hunting. Nor did he omit to instruct also his goldsmiths and all his artificers, his falconers and his huntsmen and the keepers of his dogs; nor to make, according to new designs of his own, articles of goldsmiths' work, more venerable and more precious than had been the wont of all his predecessors. He was constant in the reading of books in the Saxon tongue, and more especially in committing to memory the Saxon poems, and in commanding others to do so. And he by himself labored most zealously.

A Devout Christian

HE heard daily the Mass, and certain psalms and prayers. He observed the services of the hours by day and by night, and oftentimes was he wont, without the knowledge of his men, to go in the nighttime to the churches for the sake of prayer. He was zealous in the giving of alms, and generous towards his own people and to those who came from all nations. He was especially and wonderfully kindly towards all men, and merry. And to the searching out of things not known did he apply himself with all his heart.

He was eager and anxious to hear the Holy Scripture read to him by his own folk, but he would also as readily pray with strangers, if by any chance one had come from any place. Moreover, he loved with wonderful affection his bishops and all the clergy, his ealdormen and nobles, his servants and all his household. And cherishing their sons, who were brought up in the royal household, with no less love than he bore towards his own children, he ceased not day and night, among other things, himself to teach them all virtue and to make them well acquainted with letters.

Founder of English Literature

BEFORE Alfred's time books were, for the most part, written in Latin. He translated these works into English. John Richard Green, the historian says:

But simple as was his aim, Alfred created English literature. Before him, England possessed noble poems in the work of Caedmon and his fellow singers and a train of ballads and battle songs. Prose she had none. The mighty roll of books that fill our libraries began with the translations of Alfred, and above all, with the chronicle of his reign.

Talking With Bees

IF we take a piece of wasp's comb and hum the right note the grubs put out their heads. If we then stroke them with a very fine brush they will give us a drop of sweet liquid, just as they do to their nurses. Why should we wait to see if there are men on Mars when we have on our own planet highly social and fairly intelligent beings with a means of communication? Talking with bees will be a tough job, but easier than a voyage to another planet—J. B. S. Haldane.

Jean and Eileen Come to Town

By Marion Isabel Angus

JEAN and Eileen were two little girls who lived on a farm far from any big towns. Last Summer their little cousin Margaret had come to pay them a visit. What fun they had had in showing the timid little city girl all the wonders of their big farm, soft, downy, yellow chicks, playful white and black lambs, awkward little brown calves, a shy, leggy, black colt. Margaret, a child of city apartments, had never dreamed such wonderful things existed. She enjoyed every minute of her visit, and begged Jean and Eileen to come to see her so that she might give them as lovely a time as she had had, "not," she added, "that anything in the city is as nice as the things on this lovely farm."

The Return Visit

NOW the time had come for Jean and Eileen to pay Margaret a visit. Their mother had received an urgent wire that grandmother in Scotland was very ill and wished to see her youngest daughter. Aunt Margaret offered to look after Jean and Eileen, who were overjoyed at the prospect.

The day after they arrived Aunt Margaret insisted they take things easily after their tiresome train journey. However, they spent a very interesting day in the apartment where Aunt Margaret lived. It was a new up-to-date apartment and the two little girls were delighted with the wonders they saw. The big, shiny white Frigidaire with little cubes of ice and shelves filled with lots of strange things to eat especially attracted them. The steady rumble of Aunt Margaret's vacuum cleaner held them spellbound. The switches that turned on the electric lights were very popular and Aunt Margaret spent most of her time turning off lights. However, she was very good-natured, so she did not object to her small nieces' methods of amusement.

A Day in the Park

NEXT day the three little girls were taken to the park. First they went to see a big black bear. Margaret bought some peanuts and divided them with Jean and Eileen. They tried to throw them to the bear, but their arms were not long enough. Finally a nice man with a bright red coat and black riding breeches came over to them. He put Eileen on his shoulder, and she was able to throw peanuts right into the cage. How the bear enjoyed it! How delighted the little girls were at his enjoyment!

From there they went to the monkey house. The small brown and grey creatures chattered and jabbered, quite ignoring the human beings beneath them. There was a wee baby monkey with a pinky face, tenderly guarded by a fierce-looking mother. Eileen wanted to take the little monkey home, and was very disappointed when she learned she could not.

A scarlet and green Mexican parrot drew their attention next, but his harsh cries frightened the little Eileen, who, however, was accustomed to face big, fierce turkey gobblers undauntedly.

The ducks and swans seemed like old friends to the little country lassies, till one cross-looking black swan tried to snap at Jean's hand. From then on they kept at a respectable distance from the lily-covered pond.

All too soon the delightful day ended and three very tired little girls were tucked into a big bed with a pretty rose coverlet.

"I certainly like the city," murmured Jean drowsily. "Everything is so new and exciting."

"Perhaps," answered Margaret doubtfully; "but I think you would soon wish for your lovely farm if you lived here all the time."

Shakespeare's Birthday

"Or sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child,
Warble his native wood notes wild."

ON Tuesday of this week English-speaking people the world over will remember William Shakespeare, the wonderful man of whom Milton speaks in these lines. April 23 was the day of his death, as it is believed to have been that of his birth.

What do we know of the life of the man who by his works has done so much for the greatness of England and for the good of the whole world? Not very much. He was certainly baptised in the church at Stratford-on-Avon on April 26, 1564. His father was John Shakespeare and his mother's maiden name was Mary Arden. When he was about seven years of age he went to the Grammar School of Stratford and left at about fourteen. At nineteen he married Ann Hathaway, of Shottery, a neighboring village, who was about seven years older than he, and when still quite young went up to London. Here he acted in the theatres and wrote most of his plays and poems. When the poet was rich and famous he returned to Stratford. He died on April 23, aged fifty-three, and was buried there.

The Home in Warwickshire

NOW let us go back and try to live with the boy William in his father's home. Stratford was, and still is, a lovely town where the houses are set in the midst of gardens. His father was a farmer and, like his neighbors, followed many employments. The boy would know the ploughmen, the shepherds, and all the other workmen. In the cottages of the shepherds he would watch the wives and daughters of the laborers at work. Many an old tale would he hear there. His father's family had lived for a long time in or near Stratford and his mother's even longer.

A Country Boy

THE little fellow would hear from them, both tales and rhymes of the countryside. Long days were spent roaming the woods and fields of the lovely countryside. There was a great park near and the lad knew the ways of the deer and other wild creatures. It was a Merry England in which William Shakespeare grew up. There were many holidays when young and old spent the long Summer days out of doors. Kenilworth, where Queen Elizabeth held pageants, was near, and those great shows would teach the boy much of the greatness of the England he came to love so passionately. Not a flower that grew in garden, wood or field but was loved by this boy. The willow that grew by the brook, the fish that sported in the waters, the clouds and the hills all were pictured in that wondrous mind. He loved music as few musicians love that art.

Study of Men

EVEN in his country home Shakespeare would meet many people, for his father was honored by his fellow townsmen and filled every office in their gift. It is said that misfortune overtook him and that he lost much of his property in later life. The story that Shakespeare was forced to leave home because he had killed a deer in the park of a neighbor has been denied, but it is certain he did leave. In the great city the actor would meet men and women of all classes and ranks, and perhaps it was there that he learned so wonderfully the secrets of the hearts of his fellows.

Read the Plays

NOT all the plays of Shakespeare are suitable for children's reading. In King John we have the sad story of Prince Arthur. You will all love "The Midsummer Night's Dream." Boys and girls in the High School have played "As You Like It" and "Julius Caesar." It is to be feared that many more people in these days talk about Shakespeare than read his works. It is by reading the plays or seeing them acted that you will really share the spirit of that great man. If in what is left of this month those readers who are old enough really study a single play they would be honoring truly the poet whose birthday is celebrated this week. It is hoped younger readers will enjoy the songs reproduced on this page. Perhaps each of you can learn by heart the one you like best.

Animals of Long Ago

Mammoths in Nature's Ice-Box

WHAT is the world's oldest refrigerator? That sounds like a riddle, but I am not speaking in play. The oldest "ice-box" which has ever saved meat for man to find is the icy region of Northern Russia.

A Mammoth or "Hairy Elephant"

In 1806 a Russian fisherman was trying his luck near the mouth of the Lena River which flows into the Arctic Ocean. Suddenly he spied some kind of monster animal partly encased in ice. He walked closer and watched to see whether it would move.

The beast did not move—it was dead. Part of its flesh had been gnawed away by wild animals, but the form was almost complete. Long curved tusks came out from the head, and there was hair over parts of the hide which had not been destroyed.

The fisherman reported his discovery, and a party of men came to the spot. They saw the animal had the general shape of an elephant; but no elephant of which they had ever heard was covered by such long hair.

The animal is a mammoth, a member of a race which has perished from the earth. There were mammoths in Europe during the Stone Age, as we know from bones found there and from drawings Stone Age people left in their caves. Yet there is no record of any living mammoth having been seen since people learned to write.

Two other well-preserved mammoths have since been found in Siberia. Their skin was there, along with the hair, bones and muscles. In one case "the eyes still stared from the sockets," and the brain was in the skull. In the skull of another one the young shoots of pine trees were found.

Most mammoths were about the same size as modern elephants, but some reached a height of thirteen feet. The tusks were long, sometimes measuring more than twelve feet. A single tusk has been known to weigh 200 pounds.

The Earliest Known Birds

AN interesting subject to study is "geology." It is "the science of the earth—past and present."

In the small space we have, it is hard to tell many of the reasons for believing that the strange animals I have described ever lived, but if you made a careful study of geology, you would see how the rocks have saved the story through the ages.

An Effort to Picture the Earliest Known Bird, Based on Incomplete Remains

One part of the story which is not at all complete is the history of birds. For some reason, their bones are very scarce in the rock layers. That is most likely due to the fact that the bones of birds are lighter than the bones of other animals. Animal skeletons which have been best preserved are those whose owners died in water and sank to the bottom, to be covered by mud or sand.

Yet we have proof that there were birds living at the same time as Old Steggy, Three Horns and the Tyrant Lizard. In Germany bones and feather marks have been found in rock dating back to the Age of Terrible Lizards.

What strange birds they were! Their tails were long, they had claws at the bends of their wings, and there were teeth in their beaks! A few modern birds have claws at the bends of their wings, but whoever saw a modern bird with teeth?

The wings of the earliest known birds were shaped something like those of modern birds; but there were spreading feathers on their legs. There is reason to believe that they were better at gliding through the air than at actual flying.

Could those early birds sing? We do not know but we may guess that they were not masters of the art. Yet their presence on the earth was a promise of the time when our Springtime should be made joyous by the songs of our feathered friends.

First Rhodes Scholar Was Great Boer Leader

THE entire British Empire is familiar with the huge bequest of Cecil John Rhodes, which provides for sending to the venerable universities of the old land the most promising students of the Dominions beyond the seas. Canada has sent her quota. To what extent the bequest has fulfilled the expectations of the great empire builder is uncertain.

It is a curious and little known fact, however, that, long before Rhodes made his famous bequest, the experiment had already been tried out on a small scale. And the great bequest broke on a startled world at a time when Rhodes' experiment with his first overseas scholar looked like a colossal failure. In fact, a few weeks before or a few weeks after Rhodes died, this first scholar, after a couple of years diligent effort to demolish the British Empire, was elected commander-in-chief of the Boer forces in South Africa.

As Premier of Cape Colony in the '90's, Rhodes took a keen interest in education. Contrary to the general conception of the "great imperialist," Rhodes throughout his political career catered very strongly to the Dutch element, and till the famous Raid held their confidence to a marked degree. Even after the Raid, his own predominantly Dutch constituency continued to give him unwavering support.

It was some years before the Raid, however, that Rhodes' attention was attracted to a big, fair Boer youth who had distinguished himself as a student at the Stellenbosch collegiate school in Cape Colony. The young Boer wanted to go further with his education, but lacked the means. Rhodes had the means, in plenty. At the empire-builder's personal expense the Boer was sent to Cambridge, graduated in law in the Middle Temple, and later returned to his native Transvaal to become State Attorney.

Then came the South African War. The erstwhile Rhodes scholar plunged into the thick of it and rapidly rose to high command. Whether, like most of his compatriots, he was eager to capture Kimberly for the express and specific purpose of hanging Cecil Rhodes has never been disclosed. But when Rhodes died the young man he had helped to a higher education was still in the forefront of the dogged Dutch defence.

That was twenty-nine years ago. In the reconstruction period under British rule the erstwhile Rhodes scholar was General Louis Botha's right-hand man. When De Wet and Beyers tried, at the outbreak of the Great War, to lead a revolt, he took part in the swift decisive moves which crushed them. A little later he conquered German Southwest Africa for the British Empire; and, with Botha, represented the South African Union at the peace conference. He became Botha's successor—and today, on the eve of a new general election, he stands out in the eyes of British peoples the world over as the champion of British connection and the advocate of a better understanding between the two white races in South Africa.

The fair-haired Boer youth at Stellenbosh, the first Rhodes scholar, was Jan Christiaan Smuts.

"Jix" Started Politics With Most Signal Victory

TWENTY years ago a memorable by-election was fought in Northwest Manchester. Mr. Winston Churchill, at the age of thirty-four, had been promoted to the Cabinet and, as the law then stood, was obliged to submit himself to his constituents. His change of party had aroused intense hostility among his former friends and a desperate effort was made to defeat him. Mr. Lloyd George, who was then Chancellor of the Exchequer and was working in close alliance with Mr. Churchill in the Cabinet, broke a practice for the first time which had hitherto prevented Cabinet Ministers intervening in by-elections and went down to Manchester to help his colleague. Two of the principal theatres in the city were hired and, like Box and Cox, Mr Churchill and Mr Lloyd George made alternate appearances to large and enthusiastic audiences. All the resources of Mr. Churchill's picturesque eloquence were brought into play, but when the result was announced it was found that Mr. Churchill's opponent had won a smashing victory.

The hero of the fight was a Mr. William Joynson-Hicks, an unknown solicitor who for eight years had been struggling to get into Parliament. It was in these noteworthy circumstances, with the limelight full upon him, that "Jix" made his bow to the public.

The protagonists in that fierce contest now sit side by side on the Treasury Bench, engaged, according to malicious rumor, in another rivalry with a bigger prize at stake then was founght for on that distant and dramatic day in Northwest Manchester.

If "Jix" ever becomes Premier, it will be a curious fulfilment of a prophecy which was made some years ago at a non-political luncheon. It was at a gathering of motorists, and in proposing the toast of "Jix," who had just been promoted to the Cabinet, a speaker recalled how long ago he had predicted that "Jix" would one day become Prime Minister. He went on to draw an imaginary picture of an England ruled by "Jix" which greatly amused his audience, and "Jix," in reply, followed up the joke with light-hearted predictions as to what he would do if he ever attained the supreme position in the Government of the country.

The study of the career of the Home Secretary gives an impressive sense of a slow but steady progress to political power and prominence.

Articled to a solicitor in his youth, at the age of twenty-seven he was the senior partner in a firm of three. His marriage to Miss Joynson, which as he has said brought "joy" into his name, also brought him a large fortune, and was followed shortly afterwards by his candidature for parliamentary honors. Some years elapsed before his efforts to obtain a seat in Parliament were successful, but all the time he was perfecting his oratorical ability on political and church platforms.

Like another Conservative member, Mr. Stanley Baldwin, "Jix" sat in the House of Commons as a back-bencher for years without making much headway. But there was no more violent partisan in the bitter days of the Ulster crisis. It was then that he made a speech which is often quoted against him by his opponents, claiming that the "Lord God of Battles" was on his side and defying the forces of the Crown to "shoot and be damned!"

U.S.A. Collegiate Youths Put Something Over "G. B. S."

IT is not very often that George Bernard Shaw gets the worst of it when shafts of sarcasm are in the air, but a Toronto friend of the well-known American painter, George Martin Shane, recounts such an incident.

G.B.S., who lives on Adelphi Terrace, in London, and who hates the "U.S.A. Collegiate" type of student like poison, saw a group of his pet anathema leave the Savage Club two houses away and stop in front of his door. One of the students took a small camera from his pocket and proceeded to focus upon the sacred front door of the great British playwright.

Out came G.B.S. with a shout of anger on his lips.

"What are you doing?"

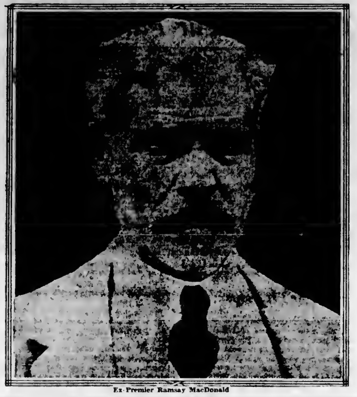
The young blood with the camera looked up as he slowly pressed the button. "Taking a picture of your place, Mr. Shaw," he said. "We Americans must have something to remember you by."

The Attila of British literature beat a hasty retreat according to the letter which goes on to say that another member of the party took advantage of the situation to take another snap. An enlarged snapshot of George Bernard Shaw, rumpled beard, skull cap, dressing gown and all, now adorns a wall in the Chicago studio of Mr. Shane.

Eleven American Roads Offer Travel by Air-Rail

ELEVEN railroads, co-operating with air transport lines, now offer air-rail transportation, according to the American Air Transport Association. The railroads sell through tickets for the entire journey, the aircraft operators providing bus service between the rail and air terminals. One of the air lines, operating between Chicago and Detroit, has an arrangement whereby a lower berth is reserved every night on a train between Detroit and New York for the use of any one who avails himself of the air-rail service.

Ramsay MacDonald's Books



Ex-Premier Ramsay MacDonald

EX-PREMIER RAMSAY MACDONALD, writing in the English magazine, The Schoolmaster, gives an interesting account of the influence which books have had on him.

"In the neighboring city in my boyhood," he relates, "there were booksellers' shops, and thither I used to hasten to linger at their windows. My beginnings in general reading were made standing there, stealing from the pages of books exposed to view what delight they would give me. I used to walk ten miles on Saturday to do this.

"When I was the proud possessor of a penny it was not to the booksellers I went, however. Their prices, even at their lowest, were not for me. There was a pawnbroker in the city, and he sold me his rubbish for next to nothing.

"Then two books came into my hands, each of which in its own way had great inflence upon me. We had a ragman who went about pushing a barrow. He was reputed to have attended college, and as he went round he often had an open book in front of him, stuck up against his crockery, from which he read as he pushed. We gave him a bad time, I regret now to say, and we were anathema to him.

"One day I made bold to steal up and read his book, and became so absorbed that he caught me. Instead of getting the welcome with his foot or fist I expected, he asked me in a kindly voice if I was interested. I said I was and asked him for a loan of it. 'Take it,' said he, 'it will do you more good than it will me.' I bore away a volume of Thucydides in English. What a story! What men! What stirring tales and moments. How the long Winter evenings sped! How the shadows beyond the lamp glow became the trysting places of heroes! . . .

"This world of being and events created by the imagination of man suddenly expanded and I roamed far and deep into it when a son of the village returned to die at his mother's fireside. He had been a watchmaker and had been south, where he had bought liberally of those books that were sold in monthy parts and had bound them. Amongst them were Dickens and Burns, Shakespeare and 'Elegant Extracts.' He doted upon them.

"When I first saw him he was sitting bent shouldered, pale and thin, stooping over one of them. His white skeleton hands rested on its pages whilst he gasped for breath. I was afraid to approach him. I felt awe and dread for one looking so closely upon eternity. With feeble breath that he seemed unable to command, he told me of the pleasure he had from Pickwick. His cheek flushed as merriment strove to elude the grasping hand of death, and he had to pause, for his cough was sore upon him. At the end of each attack he pushed his dark hair from his brow, which he wiped with a large handkerchief. I saw the perspiration on it.

"Thus I was introduced to Pickwick and to Dickens. Whenever I finished one of the heavy volumes I took it back wrapped in a clean, white towel, and took away another. There was something in keeping with death when I handed the snow-white bundle to him and received another from his hands. When I had read the last I remember his remark: 'Aye! aye! everything comes to an end. Ye're a fast reader. I thought the books would have lasted my time, but they are through afore me. Ye'll no stop here. Ye're nae born for this place. Ye'll gang south ae day, and ye'll maybe remember me and my books.'

"To this day I cannot touch Pickwick without thinking of 'Jamie Russell, Annie Russell's son,' and now the long row of thirty volumes of Dickens, bound in green, on my sheleves, is like a tablet to his memory."

Ramsay MacDonald, as his published works show, and as his term as Prime Minister more strikingly attested, is not, in the real sense, a Socialist. It is true that he has long paid lip service to some vague ideal, but it is an ideal unrecognised by the hard, uncompromising minds of that Socialist tradition which canonises Karl Marx. "I believe in self-help through mutual aid," is his cautious affirmation, "and therefore I am convinced that Socialism is the one hope of the people." This is a definition which any radical could accept. He has repudiated the "class war." He declines the "materialist interpretation of history." He repudiates bureaucratic control. And he rejects any campaign for the "immediate destruction of the capitalistic system."

Yet it was Ramsay MacDonald who, next to Keir Hardie, brought British labor to its prestige and power. By the extraordinary skill with which he persuaded the mainly non-Socialist trade unions to fuse with the intellectual "Socialists" into one so-called "Labor Party," he achieved two results. The one was the provision of money to fight elections, by a levy imposed on all the great trade unions, to which each individual member was hardly conscious that he was contributing. The other, which followed almost as an inevitable consequence, was a development of feeling in these unions that anyone who did not vote for the Labor canditete was a traitor to the trade union movement. It was all but a stroke of genius for the Labor Party.

MacDonald, although he once addressed envelopes for his livelihood, and knew the privations of poverty, has always remained in a sense aloof from other Labor supporters and colleagues. He has, in fact, lived the life of the cultured middle class, with no necessity for stinting in books and pictures and entertainment, with a fine library in London and quiet cottage homes in the country, and opportunities for traveling and seeing the great world, open only to a few

Nor did he waste his advantages. It was said of him that he was the best-read Prime Minister of modern times, and also the Prime Minister with more books and writings to his credit than any other And he has used the opportunity of travel to such advantage that no statesman in the Empire possesses more first-hand, stored-up knowledge of the world, or a larger personal aquaintanceship with the people of various lands, politics, and races who are now of importance in the world.

In his private life, Ramsay MacDonald has been shadowed by pathos, almost tragedy. His marriage (to a niece of Lord Kelvin) brought him domestic bliss, comradeship, the mingling of love with high adventure. All this was shattered by the cruel blows of fate, which took away first a child and then his wife. He has written in one of the most moving short biographies in the language an account of all that he meant to her and that she meant to him. For many years the sky was darkened and all the world of success dust and ashes. The fierce and almost undisguised ambition for "getting on" gave place to a strong strain of religious idealism which has characterized all his late efforts.

Later he was attacked by ill health, and from this he has never fully recovered. A visit to the United States failed to restore his strength; and the strain of party dissensions since has not improved him.

Big Responsibility to Write Songs on Marriage

NEW professional song writers have been responsible for more successful pantomime songs than Ernest R. Ball, the composer of "Love Me and the World Is Mine," "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," "O Little Bit of Heaven," and "In the Garden of My Heart." They have brought him fame and fortune, but apparently he is not altogether happy about them. "It is a big responsibility to launch a succession of this kind of song on a romance-loving and sentimental world," remarked Mr. Ball whimsically to an interviewer "Thousands of men who married after hearing 'Love Me and the World Is Mine' are now blaming me for it."

American Shipping

The United States now owns more than 10,000,000 gross tons of sea-going and motor shipping, according to the Department of Commerce. This represents nearly 500 per cent increase since 1914.

Super-Businessman Faces His Biggest Task

A QUIET, powerful figure of international renown is Owen D. Young, sometimes called the "super-businessman" of America. The job he is about to tackle now is perhaps the biggest he has ever come up against and he has come up against many big ones. His present interest is a world bank and J. P. Morgan, noted financier, is helping him work out the plan. The endeavor will be made to build on the need for reparations machinery an institution which promises to cast an influence over the business and material welfare of hundreds of millions of people.

Author-in-chief of the communique of the committee of experts, Mr. Young foresees an institution which may serve the banks of all countries by co-ordinating their international needs and supplying their demands for exchanges in a fashion to protect the moneys of all nations against the troubles which might develop from mishandling of national banking needs.

The magnitude of the undertaking can be seen by the fact that the bank would handle, first, the German reparations of some $8,000,000,000, then the inter-allied debt payments to America of another $10,000,000,000, and so on. After that monumental task this bank would play a part in international finance never believed possible in a human institution. Indeed, Mr. Young and his committee have launched an idea of which a great deal will be heard.

Mr. Young's selection for this great task was a personal tribute as well as being in the way of a tribute to the neutrality of the United States in the debate on how much and for how long the Reich would pay the Allies. Statesmen of Europe did not forget the large part played by the American economist in drafting the Dawes plan, which solved a troubled period and made order out of chaos in 1924

Once someone asked General Dawes after the latter had highly praised the great role played by Owen Young what he himself had done This was his reply: "Well, Owen told 'em what to do and then I told 'em they ought to do it, because there's no use asking for what you are not going to get."

Mr. Young, as chairman of the second experts' committee, is a different type of man than General Dawes, the genial and fiery. Quiet, patient and suave, Mr Young presides with gloved hands. There is no abruptness, no pounding of the fist on the table, but always quiet suggestion and firm emphasis on points on which the debaters agree. In fact the chairman keeps them all in good humor.

While he is scientific Mr. Young is also human. He joins expert business knowledge with keen judgment of human nature. Thus he has studied every man on the reparations committee and he will make use of his findings when there comes a time

Owen Young, Chairman of the Second Committee on Reparations, in aiming to establish a world bank, tackles a monumental task

Owen D. Young looks closer to forty than he does to fifty-five, his actual age He possesses great dignity and is tall, slim and studious looking He hasn't forgotten how to smile either and he delivers his most weighty sentences with a twinkle in his eye which one notices only at the end of his paragraphs.

But now the foundations for a great new house have been built and Mr. Young is the architect. It is now a question of finishing it and that is the largest part of the task. Quiet and insistent, this "super-business man" is not in the habit of failure and his one desire before him is to succeed.

A project for liquidating the debts among 300,000,000 human beings left by the world war is a pretty big dream and it is a worthwhile undertaking any way one looks at it. It means billions of dollars to be paid by millions of men.

The near future will mean everything in the plans of Mr. Young and his colleagues. He looks forward to that near future with hope.

Edison Worked Luck While It Was Coming

THOMAS A. EDISON

THOMAS A. EDISON'S luck in boyhood and manhood was chiefly due to a brain that was never asleep at the switch, Irving Bacheller relates in "Making Friends With Luck," in The American Magazine. Here is the first Edison story:

Thomas A. Edison and I were sitting in his smoking-room upstairs after dinner. I was looking at the animated portrait of a boy with a bundle of newspapers under his arm, hanging on the wall.

"That's me," he said. "I used to be a newsboy. By and by I rose to the dignity of news agent on a train which ran between Saginaw and Detroit. My last trip was as unexpected as a pair of twins. It's quite a story—and goes to show what queer happenings control our destiny or assist us to turn the tide of our affairs into other channels.

"Coming down from Saginaw one day I was passing through the smoking car with an armful of newspapers. A man stopped me. He was a Southerner, well dressed, standing collar, string tie, sparkler in his shirt front, big black hat on his head. A long cigar tilted upward from the corner of his mouth. A negro sat beside him.

"'Boy, what ye got there?' he asked.

"'Newspapers,' I answered.

"'How many?'

"'Thirty-four.'

"'Chuck 'em out o' the window,' he commanded.

I hesitated.

"'Chuck 'em out o' the window,' he repeated. 'I'm able to pay for 'em.'

"Taking him at his word, I flung them through an open window.

"He lazily turned to the negro at his side, as if the vulgar details of business were beneath him, saying in a lordly tone, 'Nicodemus, settle with the boy.'

"The colored man paid me. I returned to my trunk. I had never sold my papers with so little effort. I thought that I would try him again. I returned to the smoking car with a load of magazines that staggered me. It was enough to give a horse the heaves. I left none behind.

"My customer saw me coming.

"'Hello, boy, what ye got there?'

"'Magazines.'

"'How many?'

"I told him.

"'Chuck 'em out o' the window.'

"It was a bull market. I unloaded. For the first time my stock was moving fast. I think that half a mile of the right-of-way was paved with literature.

"'Nicodemus, settle with the boy,' my whimsical Southern friend commanded, as I returned empty-handed to his seat.

"I understood the situation. My customer evidently was having a few days of princely relaxation. Like many men of that time, on pleasure bent, he was playing the part of a lavish Roman emperor. His little hobby was the creation of astonishment. I decided that if I had been chosen by fate to assist him to ride his hobby, far be it from me to lag behind.

"I hurried back to my trunk. It was half-full of novels: 'The Gun Maker of Moscow,' 'The Hidden Hand,' 'Beldemonio,' 'The Indian Slayer,' 'Ten Nights in a Barroom' and a stock of Beadle's dime novels in yellow paper covers. Some of them showed signs of wear. The brakeman helped me stack them in my arms. It was almost a wagon load. I was in the midst of an adventure as thrilling as any in the books I carried. I toiled into the smoking car with my burden, wondering if my streak of luck would hold.

"Again the familiar words: 'Hello, boy, what ye got there?'

"'Novels,' I answered.

"'How many?'

"Having counted them I gave the number.

"Again the welcome order: 'Chuck 'em out o' the window.'

"Gladly I chucked 'em. For a minute the air was full of mystery and bloody murder. Every tramp on that railroad must have became a walking library, and I'm sure that the section boss acquired a surprising familiarity with literature.

"Once more I heard the princely command: 'Nicodemus, settle with the boy.'

"My bill was paid in full.

"I returned to an empty trunk. I closed and locked it for the last time. What should I do with it? I decided to try my luck once more. I dragged the trunk through the aisle to the smoking car. Everyone laughed as I bumped it through the door.

"Again the familiar greeting 'Hello, boy, what ye got there?'

"'Trunk,' I answered.

"He smiled as he asked. 'How many?'

"'One'

"'Chuck it off the train.'

"I dragged it to the platform and tumbled it to the right-of-way, and Nicodemus settled with me. I was out of the news agent business for good."

By way of emphasizing the moral, Mr Bacheller writes. "He knew that fortuitous fortune such as this came seldom in a lifetime. Opportunity, fate, luck—call it what you will—had played right into his hands, and he realized that it was up to him to seize it and turn it to his advantage."

Successful Saanich Industries

TOTEM AND WOODBINE RABBITRIES

Article No. 25—By GEO. M. WATT

THE rabbit industry on Saanich Peninsula is assuming proportions that a few years ago were scarcely thought possible, and what was then considered an interesting occupation, the breeding of a few rabbits, has now become a business that requires knowledge of the different breeds, experience in the handling of them, patience and a great amount of work to make it a success. Some rabbitries are carried on for breeding and exhibition purposes, others for fur and meat, while some are gradually building up a commercial wool farm for the making of various kinds of garments.

The associations governing the breeding of rabbits are: The British Columbia Provincial Rabbit Breeders' Association, of which the Hon. Dr. Tolmie is honorary president, Mr. C. Woolley president, Capt. H. B. Babington vice-president and Mr. W. G. Bird secretary-treasurer (this association is the local body, which includes the members from the Saanich district); the United Rabbit Breeders' Association, of which Mr. J. Thomson, Vancouver, is president and Mrs. E. Simmons, Victoria, is secretary, this being a Provincial organization consisting principally of Vancouver members.

Totem Rabbitry

THIS rabbitry occupies a beautiful situation overlooking Brentwood Bay and is run by a sister of Capt. Babington—Mrs. E. M. Brodhurst, who is also a licenced judge and registrar for rabbits at shows. The Angora rabbit is the principal breed here along with Chinchillas. Mrs. Brodhurst has run practically every breed of rabbit and has come to the conclusion that the Angora is the best commercial rabbit. It meets all needs, being an excellent meat rabbit and, being good and healthy, is stronger than most other breeds. The wool from this beautiful white furry animal is of such excellent quality that Mrs. Brodhurst intends having a commercial wool farm manufacturing the wool into garments of various kinds.

It is an interesting sight to watch these rabbits in their hutches, one with a nest adjoining the parent hutch, where the little ones are well looked after, and hutches of more expensive construction where the aristocrats are kept and bred for exhibition purposes. The hutches are the self-cleaning type, size two by two by three feet, with feed rack on the door, thereby being able to attend the animals without opening the door

The bucks are kept separate and consist of three direct importations from important rabbit farms such as Heaseland, Ivor and Gadner, the last two noted wool farms. The prize-winning rabbit is not the best wool producer, but the intermediate grade bred for wool purposes will produce wool worth from $5 to $6 annually at a cost of feeding running from $2 to $3. Meat and fur animals bring about $3, those for breeding purposes as high as $5.75. Prime Chinchilla pelts are sold as $1.75 each in the London market, and it is said that rabbit furs furnish almost 80 per cent of all furs used for garments.

Garments Made From Wool

ALL sorts of garments can be made from wool of the rabbit. Caps which Mrs Brodhurst makes herself from the white Angora wool sell at $2.50, also ladies' and babies' sweaters were shown together with samples of knitting wool from which can be made various articles. Capt Babington relates an incident which occurred during a recent visit to Seattle, where he met an aviator who asked him if he could have an undershirt made from the Angora wool, the reason being that the wool from the rabbit is so much softer than that from the sheep, and aviators cannot endure anything that irritates the skin.

Rabbit wool has been spun commercially in France for a number of years and is now being treated in the same way in England. The United States are just taking it up, having recently imported a shipment of wool for commercial purposes. No doubt an advertising campaign in America will facilitate the consumption of rabbit wool, as at present few people know about the beautiful quality of this wool, being free from irritation and unusually warm; in fact doctors in France recommend it especially for rheumatic patients.

Prizes Won by Totem Rabbitry

THE Totem Rabbitry is famous all over the United States, having exhibited at shows extending from Florida and along the Pacific Coast and across to Toledo. Among the numerous cups won were the special prize at Anaheim convention show for best Chinchilla doe, and at Tampa, Florida, for best doe and best Chinchilla, also for best Angora at Toledo, local prizes being those at the Victoria show, where for four years running the Totem Rabbitry won outright the W. H. Mearns Challenge Cup for best pair of light breeds, and the Scott & Peden Cup at Saanichton for best display, besides many others.

At present the main governing body on the American continent is the American Rabbit and Cavy Breeders' Association, the headquarters of which are in Chicago. Nearly all local associations are affiliated with this body, which has a guaranteed system of registration for first-class breeding stock. In 1928 22,000 rabbits were registered in Canada and the United States.

Woodbine Rabbitry

THE well-known Woodbine Rabbitry on Saanich Road has been run by Mrs. French for the past thirty years, and so successful has she been in her undertaking that she has recently had constructed on Darwin Avenue a workshop. Here Mrs. French does all the work of making and dressing furs from breeding stock to the finishing of the manufactured article. So confident is she in the success of her efforts that she firmly believes that ultimately the breeding of rabbits for fur, meat and wool will be of such large proportions, insuring commercial success as a paying and profitable industry, that it will pay those who thoroughly understand the business to devote their whole time to it instead of, as it is with many at the present time, only a sideline.

The stock run at the Woodbine Rabbitry averages 150 rabbits of the following breeds: Blue Eye White, Beverens, White Flemish, Chinchillas and Angoras. The real Chinchilla is a small rodent animal indigenous to South America, and the aim of the local breeders is to produce an animal to represent as near as possible the original Chinchilla. The famous Chinchilla buck Endymion, now four and a half years old, and responsible for all the prize-winning Chinchillas, sold for $200 to Vancouver. So good a sire did he prove that recently $450 was paid for a son. The Chinchillas and White Flemish are very serviceable animals and the most popular rabbits for fur and meat. These rabbits are amongst the most profitable animals to breed along standard lines.

Woodbine Rabbitry's Prizes

MRS. FRENCH has been awarded prizes for first-class pedigreed stock at different exhibitions for the past twenty years, both in British Columbia and the United States. In 1926 she took special prize at the American convention show at Anaheim, Cal., for the best Chinchilla buck in the show and also for the best Chinchilla in the show. She has also been awarded four silver cups, gold medal and five special prizes for best Chinchilla buck, also first prize and a special for best White Flemish doe, also prize for best exhibition of fur. The Chinchilla rabbit fur is the nearest to the fur of the original animal, and garments are now being made up in England from it that are being worn by the nobility and all classes of society. Mrs. French has on exhibition a lady's fur coat made from White Flemish and finished with Angora made for the World's Poultry Congress at Ottawa and worth $175. Many other interesting articles were shown, such as ladies' handbags, fur collars, etc., also quantities of worsted spun from the rabbits' wool.

Among other successful local breeders are Mr. C. Woolley, Inlet Drive; Mr. W. G. Bird, the Gorge; Mrs. Butterfield, Mount Newton Crossroad; and Mrs. Swartze, Verdier Avenue. Both Mrs. Swartze and Mrs. French also run catteries of Siamese and Persian breeds.

There is a strong market for all skins—prime Chinchilla pelts, White Flemish, French Silvers, Blue Beverens, New Zealand White and others. Rabbit fur now is in great demand and there is every encouragement today to extend the rabbit industry when it is considered that Vancouver Island in general and Saanich Peninsula in particular is considered one of the best parts in the Dominion for the raising of fur-bearing animals. There is every encouragement therefore for the newcomer to make rabbit breeding, if not his whole occupation, a very profitable sideline where his efforts will be rewarded with a profitable source of income from whichever angle he cares to look at it.

Look After the Ewes

WHETHER or not your breeding ewes are going to produce for you a quantity of strong, healthy lambs depends to a very great extent upon the treatment meted out to them during their period of pregnancy and especially during the two or three weeks that remain to them before lambing. To leave the expectant mothers out in the open during hard weather and only throw her a few swedes or turnips is of very little use, because the roots are nearly all water. Even if the ewe is running in fairly good pasture she should have a regular supply of sound hay every day, and in addition, a pound or two of decorticated cotton cake or the same quantity of peas. If, however, she is spending most of the time in a small enclosure, try, if possible, to get her at least once a day into a big field so that she can take plenty of exercise. Take care, though, that no dogs get near to frighten her or that she is not hurried about—through gateways, say,—for a collision is likely to cause permanent injury, if not death, to the lamb. Attend frequently to the feet, cutting away any part of the hoof that may be overgrown or showing signs of disease.

If a lamb is found chilled, having been born on a bitterly cold night, it may be revived by first giving it a little hot milk and port wine or gin, and then wrapping it in a warm blanket. When it is thoroughly warm and dry it may be returned to its mother.

When the ewes are lambing, a clean straw fold, with a few thatched hurdles to defend the animals from wet and cold weather, will go far to prevent losses. To make the ewes milk well, feed generously, giving some cake or meal, oats, hay, and a few roots if the grazing is not very good.

Trees for Prairies

WHAT was said to be the largest shipment of nursery stock ever made in the Dominion—forty-two carloads of trees, shrubs and fruits—left Estevan, Saskatchewan, in the late Fall over the Canadian Pacific lines, to be distributed over the Prairie Provinces. They went into every part of that broad territory, from the southern prairies to the Peace River country, where they had to travel hundreds of miles to reach their destination. This furnishes the index to an interesting development of some proportions which is taking place over the Canadian West, says the railroad.

The above reproduction shows a booth at the World's Poultry Congress held at the Federal Capital in 1927. Mrs. French appears in the centre of the picture, while a coat made by that lady from pelts from her own rabbitry is shown on the right.

The Pigkeeper

THE latest market report to come under our notice complains of a scarcity of small pigs, although for larger swine the trade was recorded to be a dragging one. It is strange how unwilling pigkeepers are to part with their animals before they have fattened them to great unprofitable size and weight.

Test this out for yourself. Next time a dealer comes your way, get him, by bargaining, to price any young pigs of eighty to 120 pounds that you happen to possess. Then, if you decide to keep all or some of them on, make a careful record of exactly what they cost you afterwards and what return you get from them in the end. Of course, there is always a chance that the market may swing in your favor so that it proves to have been in your interest to keep the pigs on. But as a general rule, you will find the small pigs pay best. They cost less to feed for each pound they grow in weight, they turn into cash more quickly, and the shorter the time you keep them the less is your risk of losing them from illness. And best of all, they usually fetch a higher price per pound when killed.

A striking example of the disappointments likely to be met with when gilts and sows kept in close confinement are bred from has come to our notice. Three nice-looking gilts were bought by a friend last Autumn, but owing to the lack of proper fencing, although he has plenty of grass land, he decided to keep them in a shed. They were taken to a boar and bred and the net result after more than four months' expensive keep is eight piglings. One gilt proved to be barren, another had a litter of seven, all off which died or were overlain, and only the third has justified her keep. But when the expense of the other gilts is allowed for, the one litter will have cost more to produce than it is likely to repay.

If a small area of pasture could have been fenced off so that the gilts could have spent the greater part of their time before farrowing outdoors, they would have cost less to feed. The litter that died would probably have been saved and the barren sow would probably have shown by unmistakable signs that she needed to be taken to the boar again, so that only three weeks would have been lost. At the worst, the cost of the fencing would no doubt have been covered by the greater number of piglings saved.

The near approach of Spring brings up once again the old problem of fencing for pigs. It is not a bit of good to let them stray and make themselves a nuisance to your neighbors. On the other hand, it is such a saving of food to let them graze that you cannot afford to confine them.

Undoubtedly the cheapest fencing is barbed wire, and a fence of six or seven strands about three feet high will keep in any pig. Of course, this fence is not so easily moved as the square netting type, but on some holdings no attempt is made to move the fence. A fresh one is put up when the pigs need a change of grazing, and so in time a field becomes subdivided into a number of separate enclosures which can be grazed in rotation and then given a dressing of lime.

Rabbits

SUPPOSE you keep a few rabbits and you do not seem to be doing very well with them. You seem to be doing all you can to make them pay, but instead you are losing money. You ought to ask yourself the question, "Am I keeping the right rabbit?" A little self-examination along this line may be the means of putting you on your feet again. For instance, you may be keeping rabbits that are absolutely of the wrong breed for the particular market present in your district. If wool is in great demand, to the exclusion of other lines, what is the use of keeping rabbits merely for exhibition? Again, if you are a breeder, the breed of rabbit in which you specialize may not be a popular one with the people in your district. Their fancy inclines to a different sort of rabbit altogether. Well, that is the sort of thing you have to find out by using your eyes and making inquiries among those around you. But your rabbits may be of the right breed for the purpose, and yet do not "catch on." What is wrong then? Well, there is such a thing as quality, and although your stock may be correct in breed, they may be of doubtful quality. The only wise course for you to adopt in such a case is to scrap your present stock either immediately and get in fresh, or gradually, by getting your present does mated to a buck who will put the bad points to rights.

Every month or so you will find it necessary to examine the claws of your rabbits and, if they are growing long, to trim them. Long claws are a source of danger. With them a rabbit can inflict serious injury on its brothers and sisters, and also on its attendant. Apart from that, they worry the rabbit, may grow into the foot, and are quite likely to get caught in the wire netting of the hutch door, as well as in cracks of the woodwork, and to be torn out. To trim the claws, put the rabbit in a sack, leaving the head free. Cut a hole in the sack and then let one leg at a time come to light through this. In shortening the nails, great care must be taken not to injure the quick, and to avoid this we advise you, until you become experienced, merely to trim down the points. You can use a pair of scissors for the purpose, but they are liable to split the nails. It is better to use a small pair of cutting pliers.

If the feet and hocks of a rabbit get sore through too much sitting about on a dirty floor, wash them carefully with lukewarm water, dry them well and smear them with vaseline. If the soreness is severe, the legs must be bandaged up.

A soft, hot and painful swelling on a rabbit's foot is most likely to be an abscess. Bathe this several times a day with fairly hot water until it comes to a head, meanwhile keeping the animal on deep, very clean litter. When a head has formed, lance it with the point of a sharp knife. Sterilize it (by passing it through the flame of a methylated spirits lamp or immersing it in boiling water), press out the matter with wads of cottonwool, and then wash the wound well, using lukewarm water to which a few drops of disinfectant have been added, or boracic water, made by dissolving a tablespoonful of boracic powder in a pint of water. After washing, dry with a quite clean cloth, apply boracic ointment on a bandage and continue the applications until the wound heals.

Growth of Chicks

(Experimental Farms Note)

EXPERIMENTAL work during the past few years has drawn particular attention to the importance of sunlight in the successful brooding and rearing of chicks.

It has been definitely shown that unless special supplementary feeds are fed chicks cannot be raised satisfactorily in the absence of sunlight. Since many early hatched chicks, particularly where cold Winters are the rule, have not the opportunity of getting out into the sunlight it is essential to supply some form of substitute for the sun's rays to avoid trouble from leg weakness or rickets. Experimental work carried on at the poultry division of the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, has definitely shown that in spite of the complete absence of sunlight, chicks may be kept healthy and make rapid gains if given certain supplementary feeds.

Of these, cod liver oil is the most efficient and when fed at a rate of 2 per cent of the mash consumed or about one tablespoonful daily to each fifty chicks, will give complete protection against rickets. Since cod liver oil is easily obtainable it is advisable to feed this material rather than the product known as cod liver meal, since the latter has given rather indifferent results in experiments conducted here. It is just possible that the same uniformity in quality is not available in the case of cod liver meal, and that it therefore is not, at the present time at least, as dependable as cod liver oil.

Certain physical agencies in the form of ultra-violet ray machines and special glass substitutes will also give the desired effect. The former method of supplying the sun's rays is at the present quite expensive, and in the experimental stage, its practical value not having been definitely determined. Most glass substitutes are not as durable as common glass and allow only a certain proportion of the sun's rays into the house, and once the chicks can get out into the sunlight, or windows can be opened wide, their usefulness is ended. Cod liver oil is much cheaper and will carry the chicks over until such time as they can reap full benefit of the sun's rays.

Background and skyline are features not half appreciated. Given a proper setting, a cottage will often be more attractive than a poorly-set mansion. Plant heavily behind and to the rear sides of your home if on a big lawn.

Some Notes on Bulbs

SO often does one read in connection with wild flower preservation a request that people spare the leaves when gathering the Erythroniums that it almost sounds as if the lovers of our native plants were being carried away by their own enthusiasm, and yet in reality the very life of every bulb depends on the retention of its foliage leaves.

Bulbs are of course large underground buds with thick fleshy scales containing a rich supply of food material. And this store of food that enables the bulb to carry on from season to season is manufactured up above the ground in the green foliage leaves, so that if these are destroyed that particular bulb just shrivels up and dies, or at the best produces but a poor specimen of a plant the following year.

Like all other bulbs, bulbs grow from a stem here represented by the solid "core" at the base of the scales. In certain plants, however, such as the crocus, or our local Erythronium, it is this stem portion that acts as the storehouse, the bud itself consisting only of foliage leaves and immature flowers. Such "solid bulbs" are not of course true bulbs and are usually referred to as "corms."

With the coming of Spring, both bulbous and cormous plants develop with extraordinary rapidity, drawing building materials from their underground storage and easily outstripping any plant that has to develop from a germinating seed. This power of rapid growth is especially beneficial to plants growing in countries where the moist season of Spring is of but short duration and followed by a hot dry Summer, whose drought swiftly decimates the gay flower carpet of early Springtime. In consequence, the bulb habit is especially marked among plants of regions such as the Mediterranean coasts, South Africa, California, and to some extent even our own area with its lilies, camass, brodias, wild onions, zygadenus, etc., all of which hurry to race through their life history before the dry days of Summer.

Usually the leaves and flowering shoot develop together, but the first objective is to produce a flower and set its seeds. This done, the individual plant so to speak looks after its own interests and the foliage leaves rapidly increase in size and swiftly manufacture a supply of food for next year's bulb. In some plants like the daffodil, it is the base of the foliage leaves themselves that act as storage scales, while in other plants they merely serve to send the food down to other leaves specially adapted to this purpose. In any case, within the central storage leaves arises the bud of the next season's flowering shoot. All bulbous plants do not, however, follow this sequence, for example, in the brodias and the little purple onion so abundant about our rocks in late June, the foliage leaves appear early in the year and have done their work and shriveled up long before their flowers appear to lend a note of life and color to the already burnt up grasses. While in the colchium or meadow saffron, grown in many Victoria gardens, the mauve crocus-like flowers appear in the Fall and the deeply hidden seed box does not ripen until the following Spring, when it appears above the ground in company with the tuft of fresh green leaves.

As previously stated, the Mediterranean countries are particularly rich in bulbous plants and nearly all our Spring bulbs, happy as they are in northern gardens, come from these drier, sunnier lands. The various species of narcissi may claim Spain, Italy, Greece and even North Africa as their real home; grape hyacinths, beloved in Elizabethan days for their musky perfume, grow wild in Southern France, while tulips and hyacinths were brought long ago from Turkey, Persia and other Eastern lands. Indeed it is only the little snowdrop and the wild daffodil or Lent Lily that are truly indigenous to Central and Northern Europe, and for that reason they have a special claim to our affections. The giant snowdrops are a comparatively recent importation from Asia Minor, while the scilla or Siberian Squill and the chionodoxas, with their rare note of clear blue are likewise practically newcomers in the garden.—L. M. Priestly.

For the foundations remember always—height in the corners, immediately in front of pillars and at the bare wall spaces. Under the windows low or medium plants only.

Lawn furniture—that is, bird baths, seats, rose arches, sundials, etc., if properly placed make the lawn much more attractive. These little touches help beautify.

Garden Week by Week

By NORMAN W. F. RANT, F.R.H.S.

THE Spring flower show is coming off at the end of the month, and one is tempted to say a word or two on the subject of flower shows and the attendance. A Portland, Oregon, horticulturist once said: "If we could show flowers dancing jazz, it would be easy to draw the crowd. One cannot, of course, do this, and perhaps in this day of jazz, talkies and movies a great many people think that a flower show is a tame affair. The writer doubts very much whether a flower show will ever appeal to those who do not really love nature in all its forms.

One may say that the force of example will go some way to make people take up gardening. That is, the seeing of what others have done will tend to make one go forth and do likewise. This may be true to an extent, but a man must have that inborn love of growing and seeing things grow before he will take to serious gardening.

However, this Spring's flower show is going to be a very decided advance on any of its predecessors and it will be well worth a visit from those who garden, those who do not garden but who love flowers, and by those who want to learn something about what can be done along these lines on Vancouver Island.

Making Big Strides

IT is absolutely astonishing what strides good gardening is making in the United States. A few years ago gardens were the exception rather than the rule, over there. If one had a bit of green grass and a few geraniums in the Summer one had a garden. Today some of the finest gardens in the world are being constructed in the States.

I have just been reading an account of the Centennial Flower Show in Boston, held in the middle of last month. An English writer said of this show that the exhibits of A. C. Burrage outclassed anything of the kind he had ever seen in England. This exhibit consisted of a display eighty feet by sixty feet in size and rose from the floor to the roof of the building, fifty feet. It embraced orchids and other tropical plants with a huge waterfall starting at the roof and ending in a pool on the floor level. This exhibit won the $1,000 cup. The writer goes on to say that for size this exhibit was as large as most of the great outdoor exhibits in England

This only goes to show what a hold gardening is taking on people on this continent. I have spoken of the United States, simply because, with the huge population and wealth of that country, people are able to do great things, but while Canada must go more slowly, she is not a bit less keen on gardening than is the Republic.

No Monopoly Here

WE on the Coast are apt to think we have a sort of monopoly on gardening in Canada, but such is far from being the truth. Eastern Canada and the Middle West are doing a great deal of gardening and very good gardening. I wonder how many people in Victoria know that the City of Calgary has one of the very best rock gardens in the Dominion? The City Parks Department of Calgary is always ready to get any plant that will grow in that climate to add to the collection in the municipal rock garden.

Probably the finest peonies in the world are grown in and around Winnipeg.

Toronto grows wonderful roses and the Ontario Rose Society has more members than any other gardening society in Canada.

Hamilton, London and Ottawa are great flower centres and each of these cities has a host of keen gardeners who are always on the lookout for some means of improving, not only their own gardens, but their city parks and open spaces.

Montreal Gardens

MONTREAL is full of people who garden and who know gardening at its best. A number of iris have been introduced into commerce which were raised by a keen gardener in Montreal. It is no secret that Mr. Cleveland Morgan, the head of the great firm of Henry Morgan & Co., is a raiser of irises of the first magnitude. He has taken prizes in New York for his own seedlings and has exhibited at the Royal Horticultural Society in England.

Another of Montreal's gardeners is Mr. Henry Birks, head of the well-known firm of jewelers. Mr Birks has visited Victoria several times and is always on the lookout for something new for his Montreal garden.

So, while Victoria has no monopoly on gardening she has a great many advantages, advantages which some of us do not value enough. Our climate, which makes it possible for us to garden all the year round is one. Note the advantage of this against only five to six gardening months in other parts of the Dominion.

We know we have beautiful gardens in Victoria, but there is room for many more, and there are many unsightly spots that could be made beautiful. One is glad to know that some steps are being taken in this direction by the Vancouver Island Horticultural Association and the Victoria Horticultural Society. The first item in this campaign is the Central School frontage on Yates Street. These societies, with the aid of the City Council, are going to plant that stretch and make it a real beauty spot, and other items will follow as soon as funds can be made available.

Louisiana Strawberries

A CROP of strawberries valued at $8,000,000 recently began moving north and east from Hammond, La. About 25,000 acres of berries are now coming into maturity in that section and it is estimated that between 3,000 and 3,300 freight express cars will be required.

Safety First Leader Fined for Speeding

To be prosecuted and fined for breaking the regulation he had helped to frame was the unusual experience of Major Thomas Loughborough, a member of the Safety First Council of Great Britain. The major appeared before the Oxted magistrate's court for exceeding the twenty-mile-an-hour speed limit through Warlingham village. Fining him $35, the presiding magistrate told Major Loughborough he had set a bad example to other road users, since he was a member of the committee which framed the twenty-mile-per-hour rule.
